It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. Grab a group of friends, make strips of paper, and shuffle to make donations.

It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

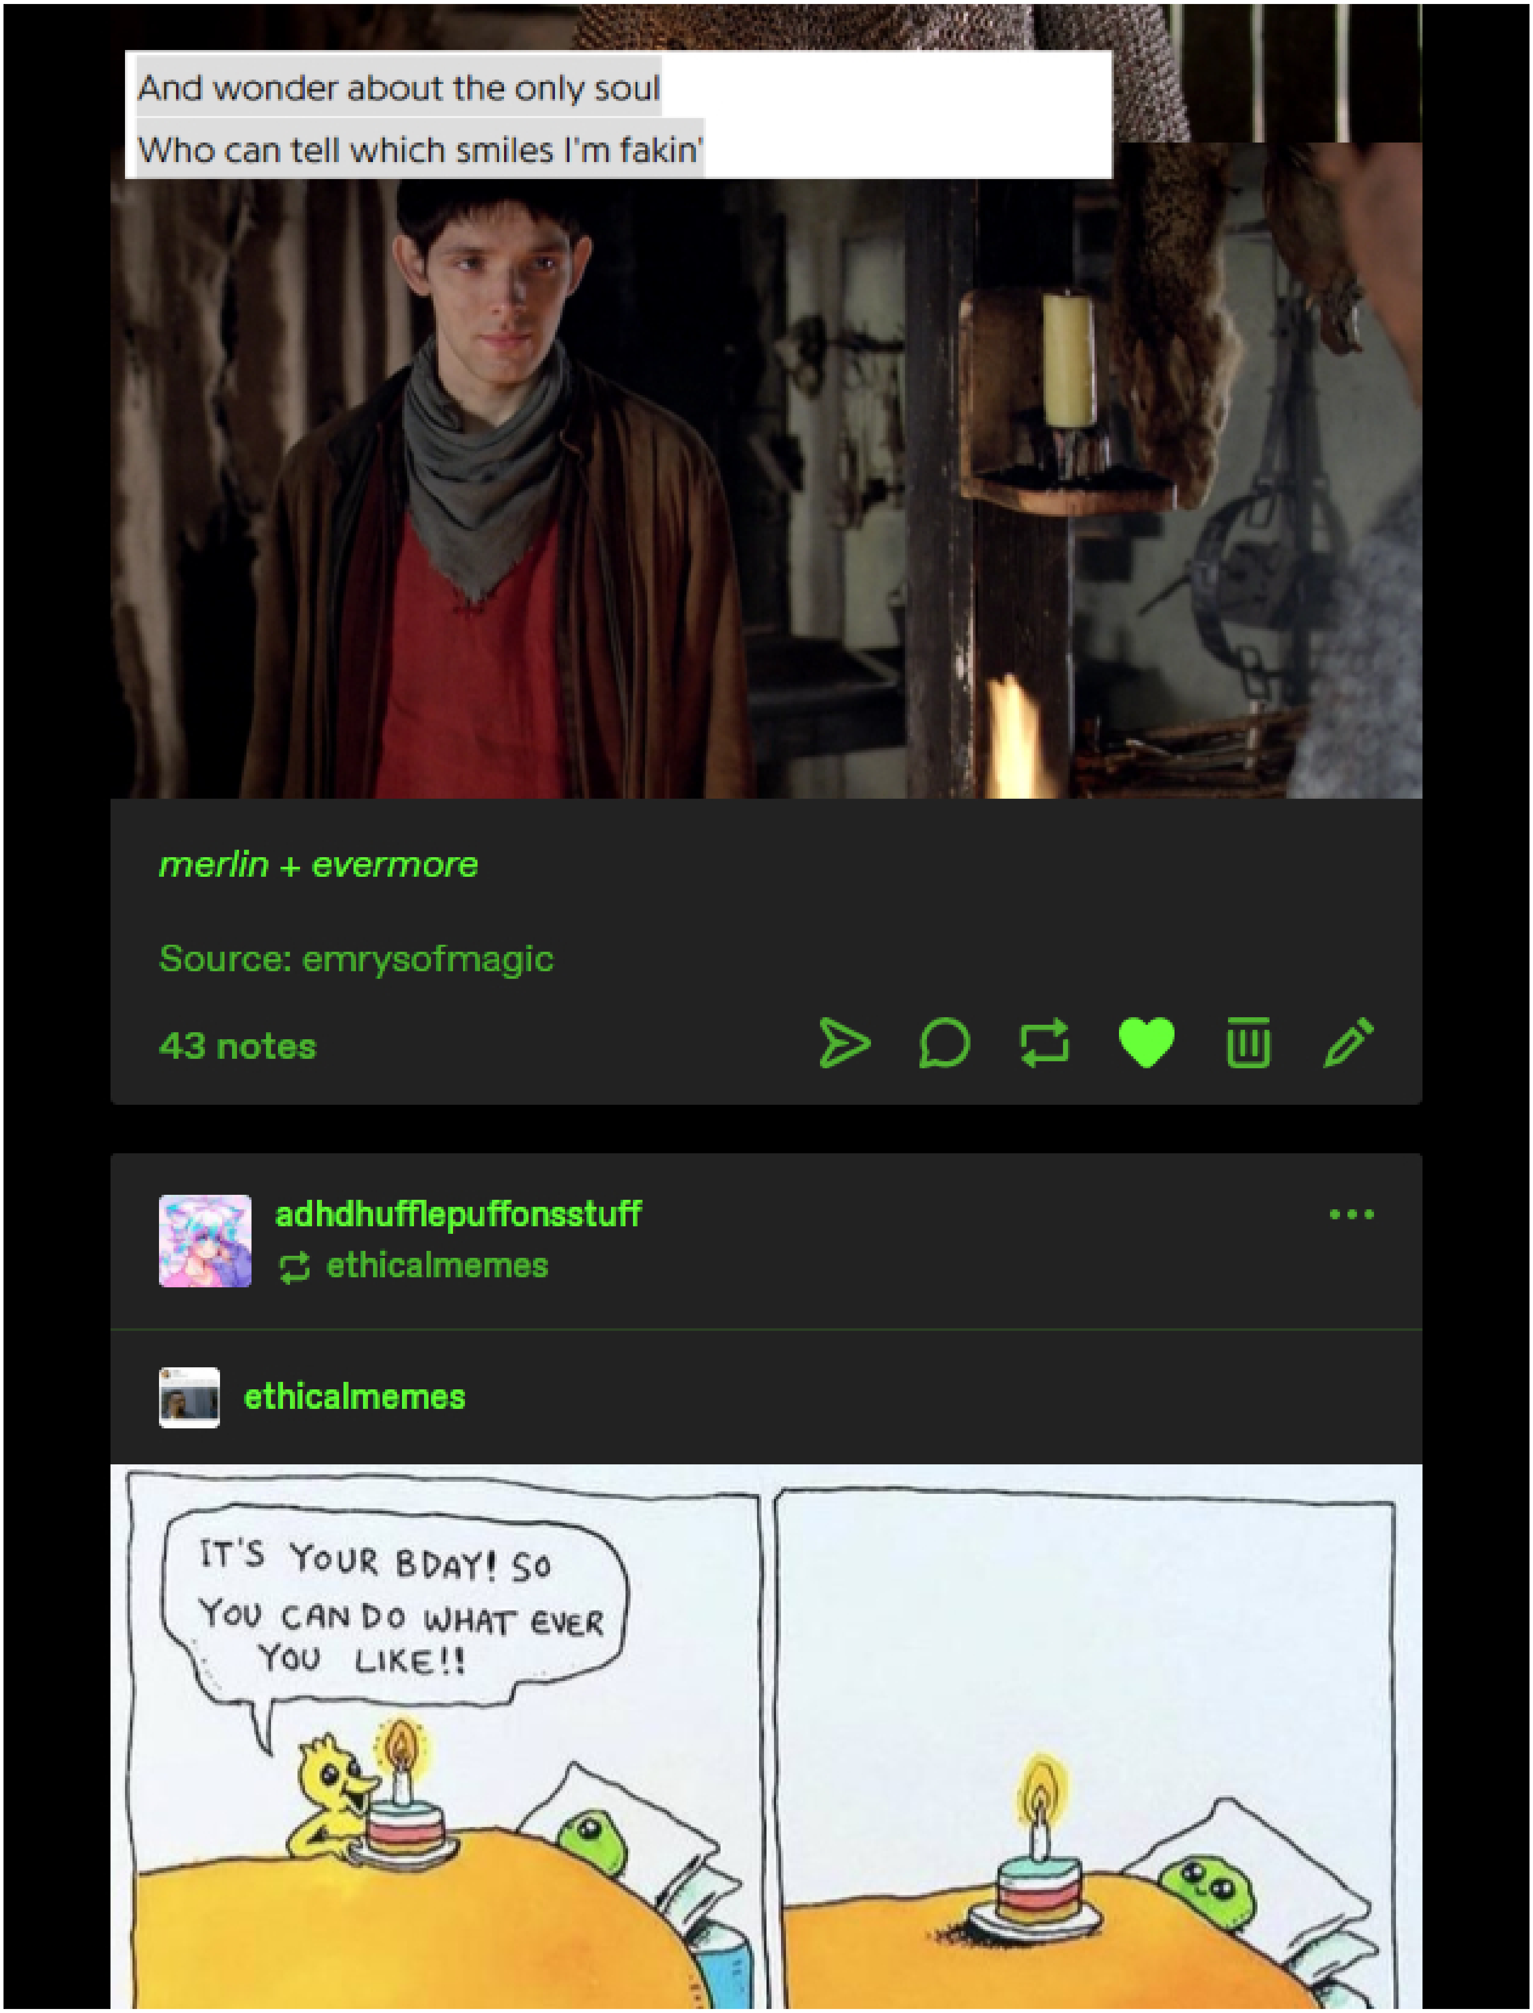
I'm like the water when your ship rolled in that night
Rough on the surface, but you cut through like a knife

Eyes full of stars
Hustling for the good life
Never thought I'd meet you here
It could be love

But I don't like a gold rush, gold rush
I don't like anticipatin' my face in a red flush

And if you're ever tired of being known for who you know
You know that you'll always know me,

Oh, I can't
Stop you putting roots in my dreamland
My house of stone, your ivy grows
And now I'm covered in you



And wonder about the only soul
Who can tell which smiles I'm fakin' merlin + evermore

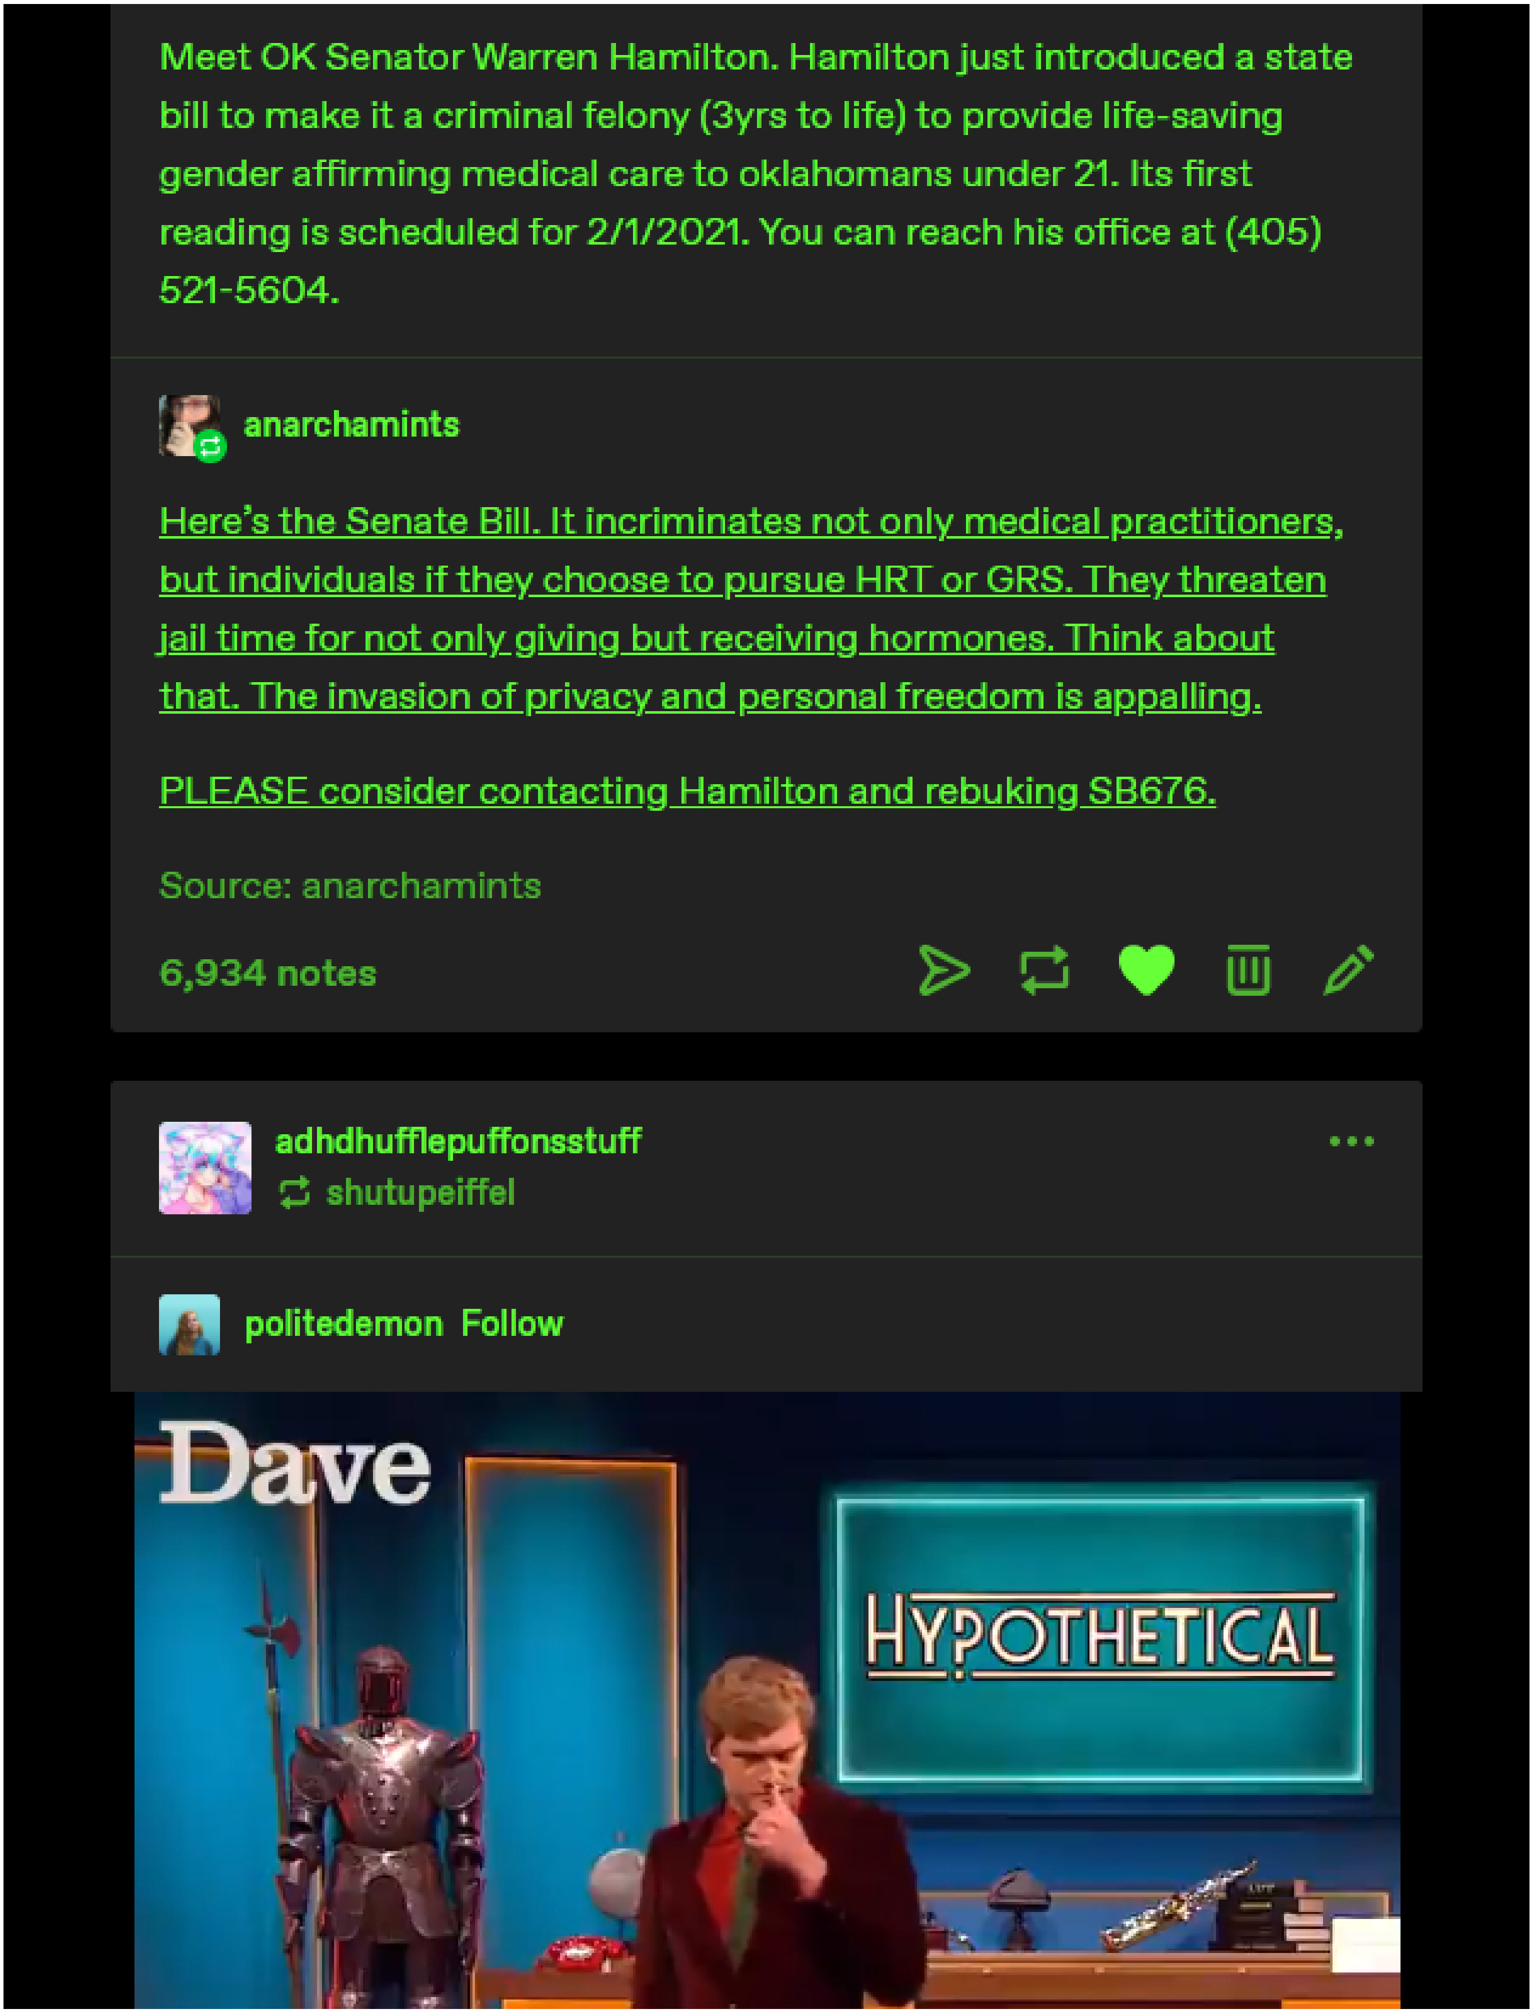
OK LGBT HEALTHCARE ALERT: Y'all need to be watching OK Senate bill 676 which attempts to regulate trans healthcare (surgery, HRT, any "medical" intervention) like alcohol by making it illegal for anyone under 21 to receive trans medical care and threatens providers with felonies.

1:05 PM · 1/24/21 · Twitter for iPhone

I cannot imagine what the actual legal argument is for slapping a felony on a trans healthcare provider. ESPECIALLY when they're felony on a trans healthcare provider, ESPECIALLY when they're consulting patients that are OVER the legal age of 18.

The state wants to control everyone's bodies. Smash the state.

anarchamints



Meet OK Senator Warren Hamilton. Hamilton just introduced a state bill to make it a criminal felony (3yrs to life) to provide life-saving gender affirming medical care to oklahomans under 21. Its first reading is scheduled for 2/1/2021. You can reach his office at (405) 521-5604.

anarchamints

Here's the Senate Bill. It incriminates not only medical practitioners, but individuals if they choose to pursue HRT or GRS. They threaten jail time for not only giving but receiving hormones. Think about that. The invasion of privacy and personal freedom is appalling.

PLEASE consider contacting Hamilton and rebuking SB676.

just some thoughts but “fiction affects reality” and “fiction isn’t reality” are ideas that really really can and should coexist

lets imagine you’re running a dnd game, and one of your friends tells you they wanna play an evil-aligned character who’s prone to doing some really, seriously fucked up shit.

“fiction isnt reality” is why I’m not gonna automatically assume that’s a direct indicator of their personal morals and that they’re a horrible, fucked up person who needs to die or whatever (unless, of course, in the unfortunate but less likely event that they prove themself otherwise). a game of dnd is just fiction and it can be a safe space to explore topics and characters like those.

but “fiction affects reality” is why they have to check in with the other players about what they are and aren’t comfortable seeing that character do in-game. like seeing them shoot a random dude for his money could be fine but seeing them torture the dude is… a little too much. it could have a negative effect on the mental health of the other players.

fiction definitely is a safe space to explore taboo and problematic topics in but you still gotta be mindful of the people around you and how what you do or write could potentially harm them. you gotta be respectful of what people are comfortable and uncomfortable with seeing, and realize that, no matter the situation, there will always be definite lines you can cross.

My (29F) Boyfriend (29M) keeps getting into fights with a cook at Waffle House reddit.com/r/

This is the crazy part: my BF keeps going back and ordering eggs and getting into fistfights with the same cook. It's almost a ritual at this point. My BF orders runny eggs, the cook serves him some other version of eggs, and then they beat the shit out of each other. I quit going with him after the second fight, but he kept going by himself. They're like Peter and the giant chicken from Family Guy, it's the weirdest thing. They've physically fought like 6 or 7 times over this.

I've tried to talk to him about it a few times, but he keeps saying it's a matter of principle. I've told him to talk to the manager or something like that, but he just waves me off. Apparently that cook hasn't yet made him the correct runny eggs, but it's like he spends the week learning new ways of preparing eggs to piss my boyfriend off.

my cat hates taking his pills. the only way we can get him to eat them is to turn it into an elaborate pantomime - we take the packet out of the cupboard slowly and hold it up, saying "oh!! what's this? what's this? a TREAT? a TREAT for louis????" while making surprised faces. we offer him a pill... then, before he has a chance to sniff it, we wag our fingers at him and replace it in the packet so it becomes a Tantalising Forbidden Mystery. we continue doing this until he's so confused and excited that he will eat the pill as fast as possible, just so he can find out what it is before we can take it away from him again. as soon as he's eaten it he looks utterly disappointed and betrayed, like a child who just ate a delicious sweet only to find it was a chocolate-coated brussels sprout. it never gets old you like a journey. you enjoy the reassurance that no matter how far a character (or you) fall, they will always get up. despite the hardships and challenges and the hurt, there will be an end where it will all be worth it. there's a point or many points in your life where you felt lost worth it. there's a point or many points in your life where you felt lost, times where you felt like it was an endless cycle of taking two steps back every step you take. you might have even felt like you fell down the steps with what you thought would be the final step up. but that means you also know strength and perseverance and tenacity. you know the hard work it takes to keep pushing forward, even when you felt you couldn't push anymore. and for that? i want to remind you that it's okay to take a moment to stop. i know that you never want to fall back down as far as you've fallen, but you need to remember to stay in the present and take care of the you now. it may feel like you're going non-stop, but you can and should take a moment to take care of you. the you you have now matters just as much as the you might become or have been.

Loki Song Of The Day

23 January 2021

King of the Lost Boys
(Sara Bareilles)

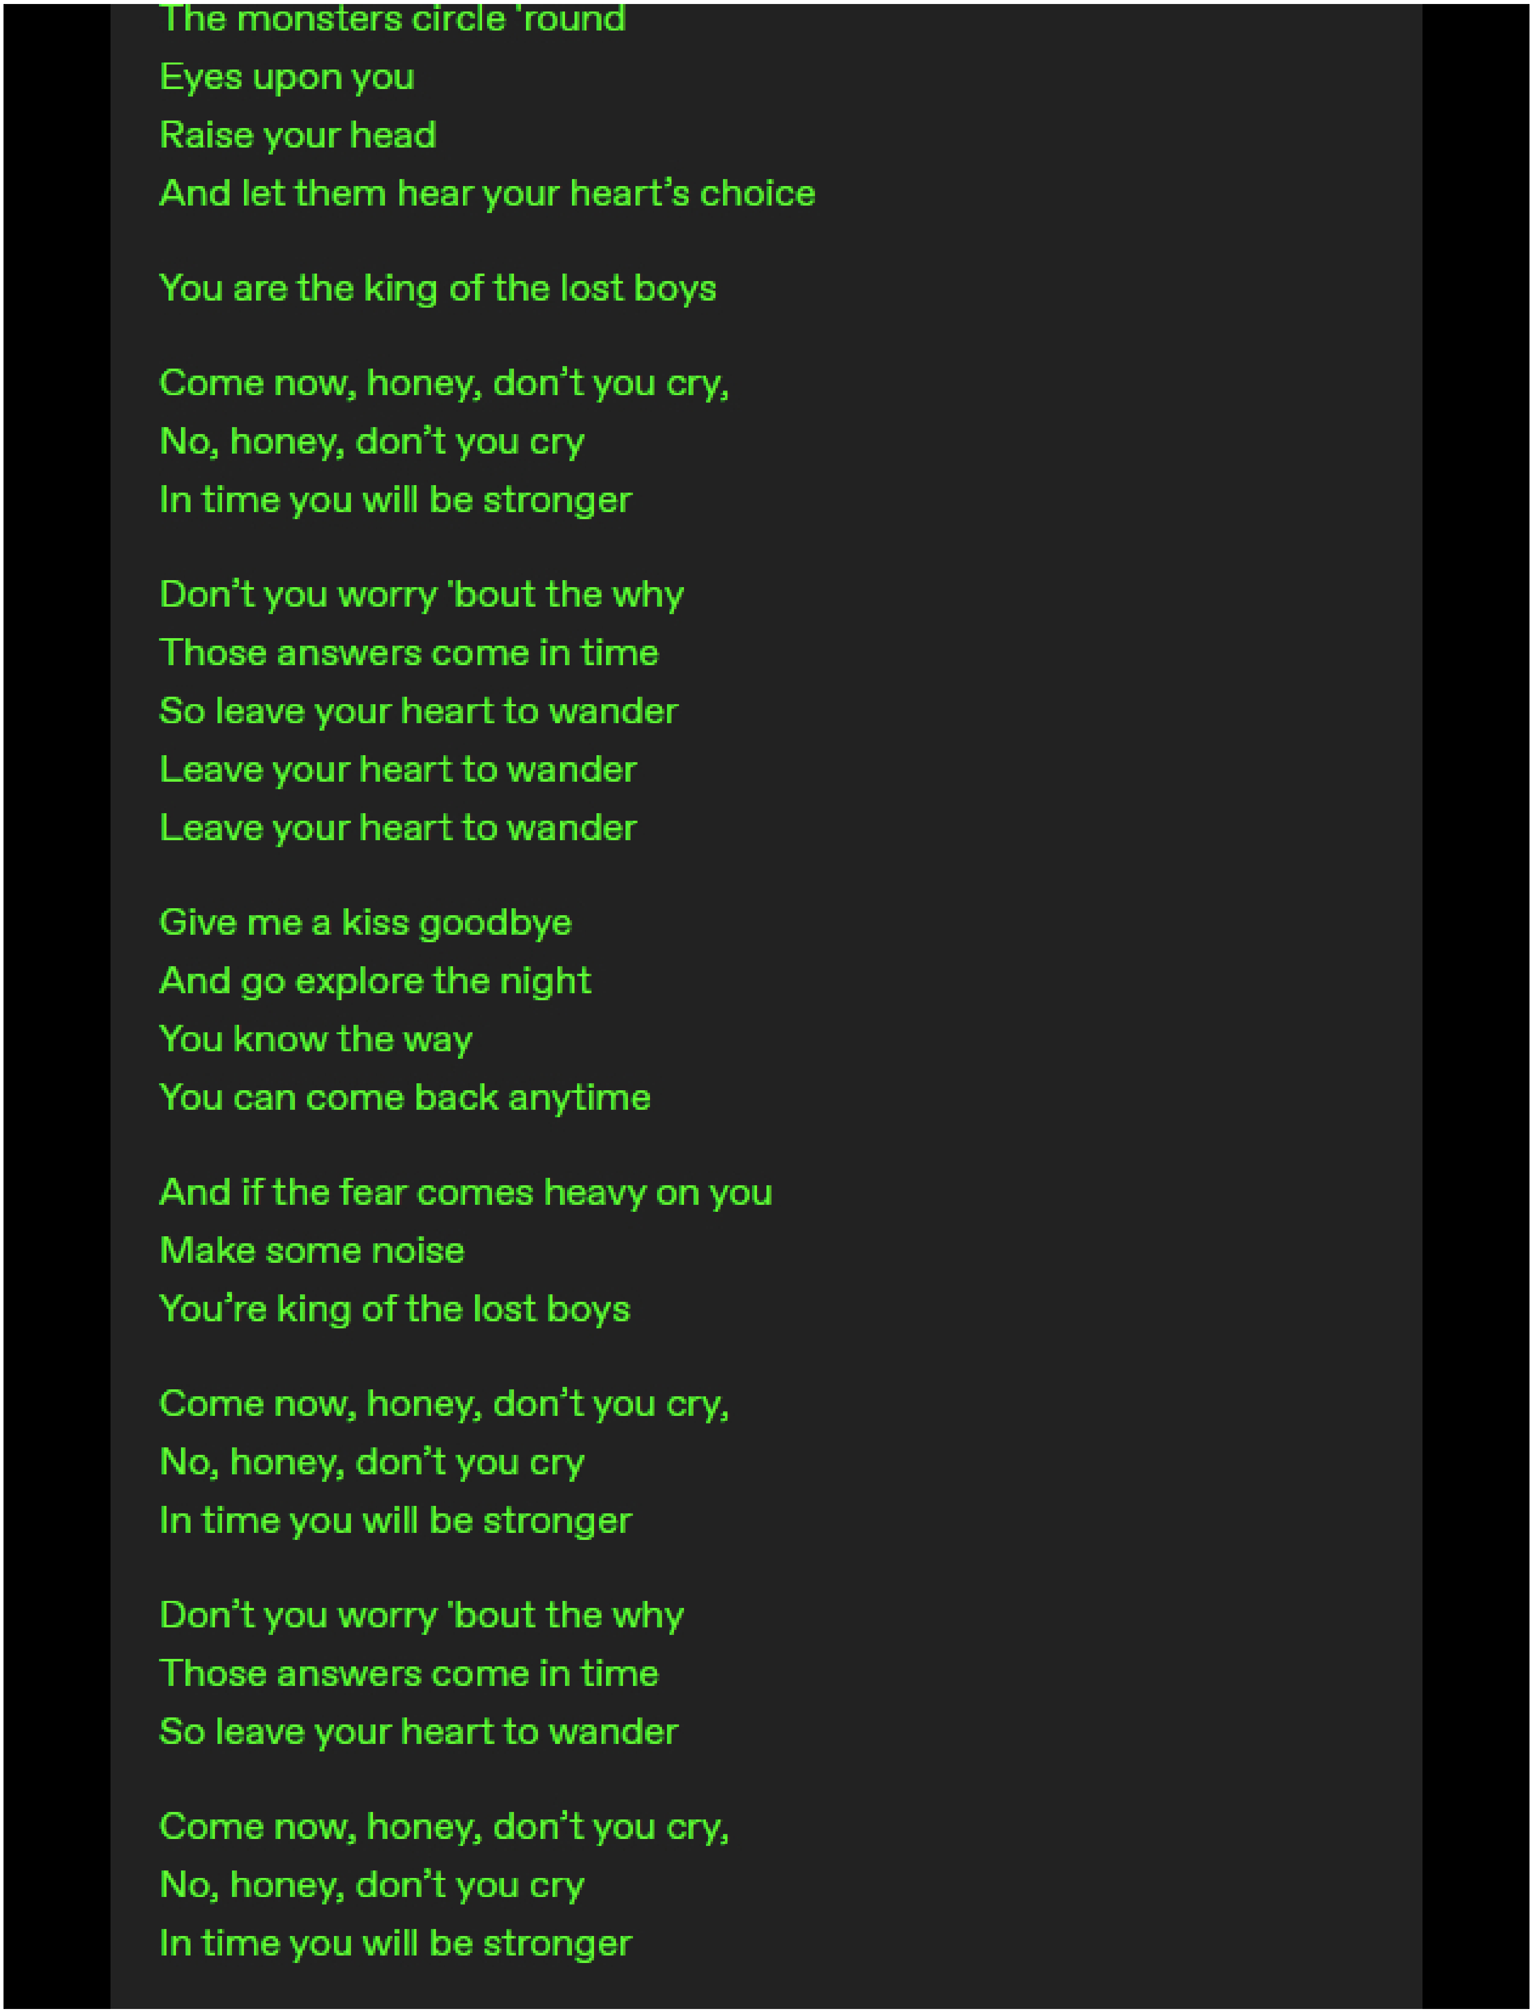
Oh, honey don’t you cry
At the absence of the light
Even the Sun must rest his weary eyes

So let the night wrap stars around you
Weigh the anchor
And sail into the night’s joy
You can be king of the lost boys

Come now, honey, don’t you cry,
No, honey, don’t you cry
In time you will be stronger

Don’t you worry ‘bout the why
Those answers come in time
So leave your heart to wander
Leave your heart to wander

Shadows begin their games
These faces with no names
Whisper words in tongues
Make your ears ring



The monsters circle 'round
Eyes upon you
Raise your head
And let them hear your heart's choice

You are the king of the lost boys

Come now, honey, don't you cry,
No, honey, don't you cry
In time you will be stronger

Don't you worry 'bout the why
Those answers come in time
So leave your heart to wander
Leave your heart to wander
Leave your heart to wander

Give me a kiss goodbye
And go explore the night
You know the way
You can come back anytime

And if the fear comes heavy on you
Make some noise
You're king of the lost boys

Come now, honey, don't you cry,
No, honey, don't you cry
In time you will be stronger

Don't you worry 'bout the why
Those answers come in time
So leave your heart to wander

Come now, honey, don't you cry,

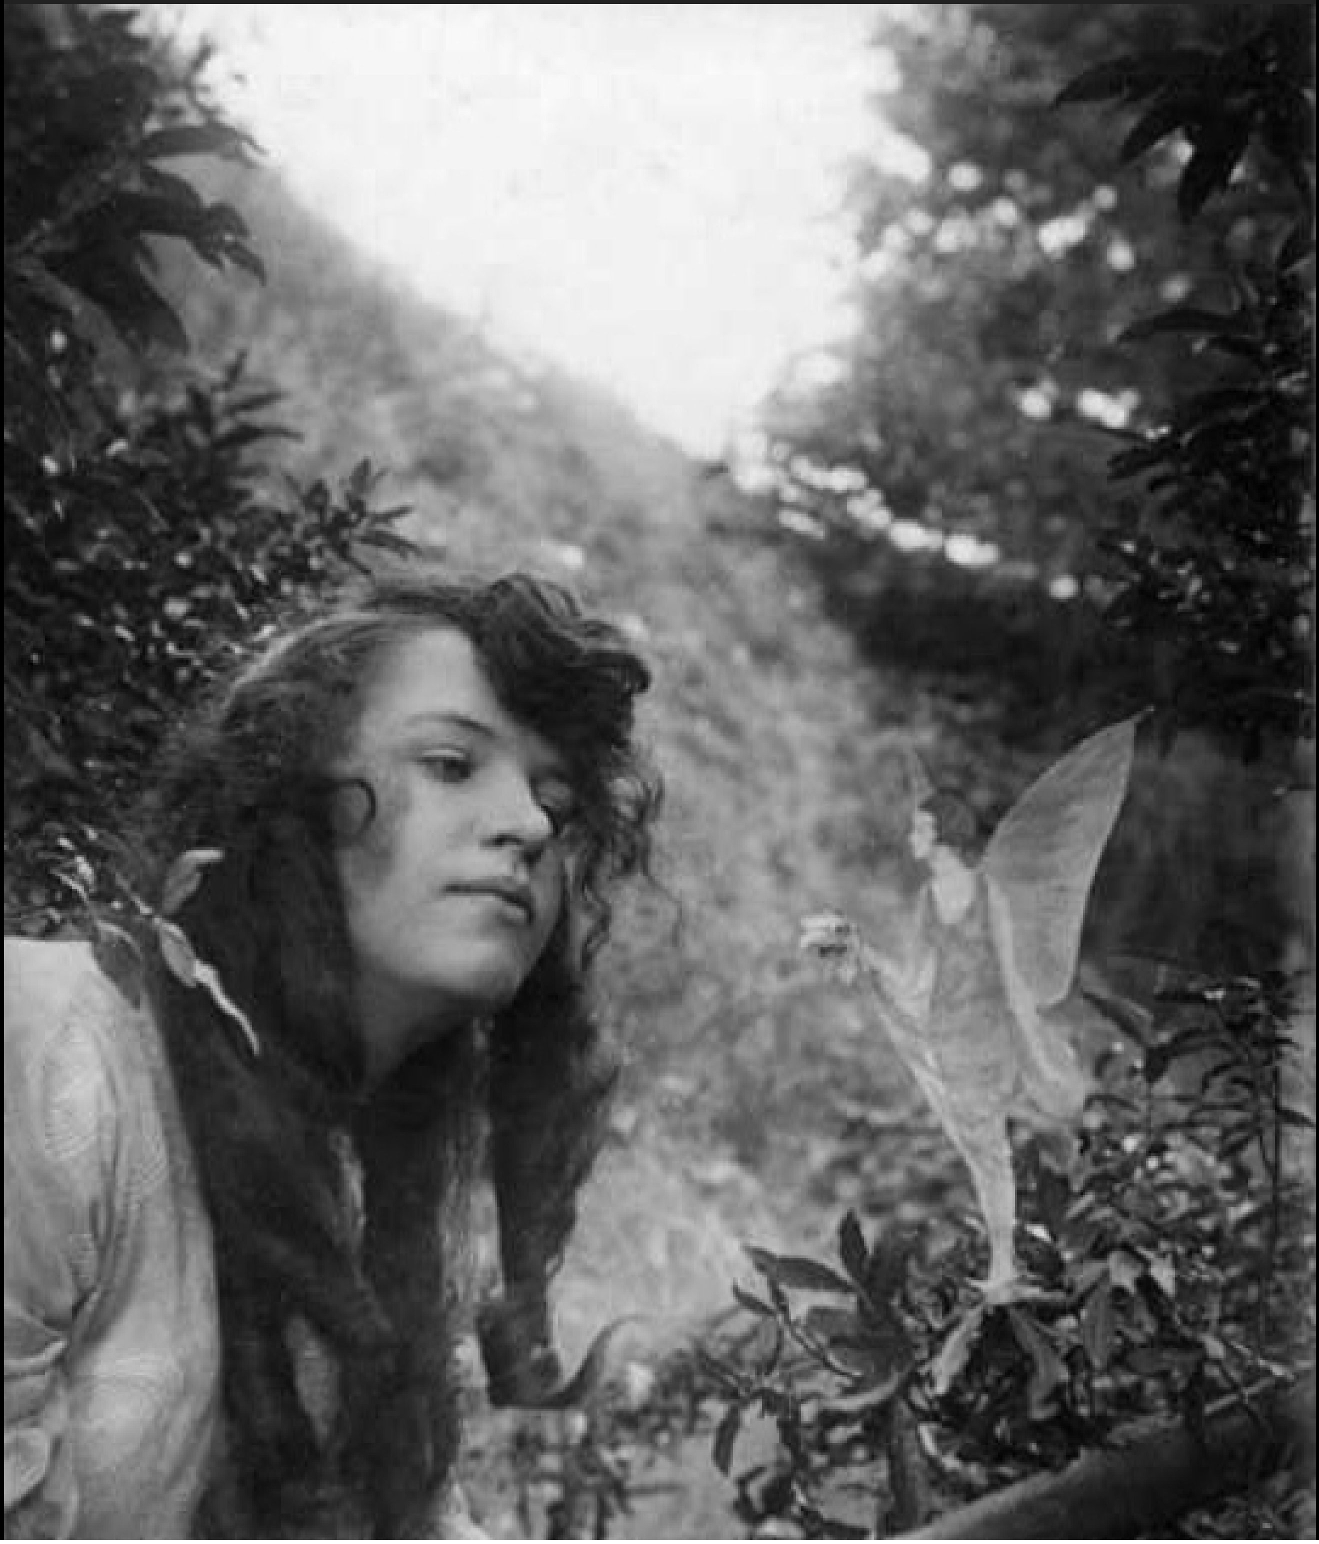
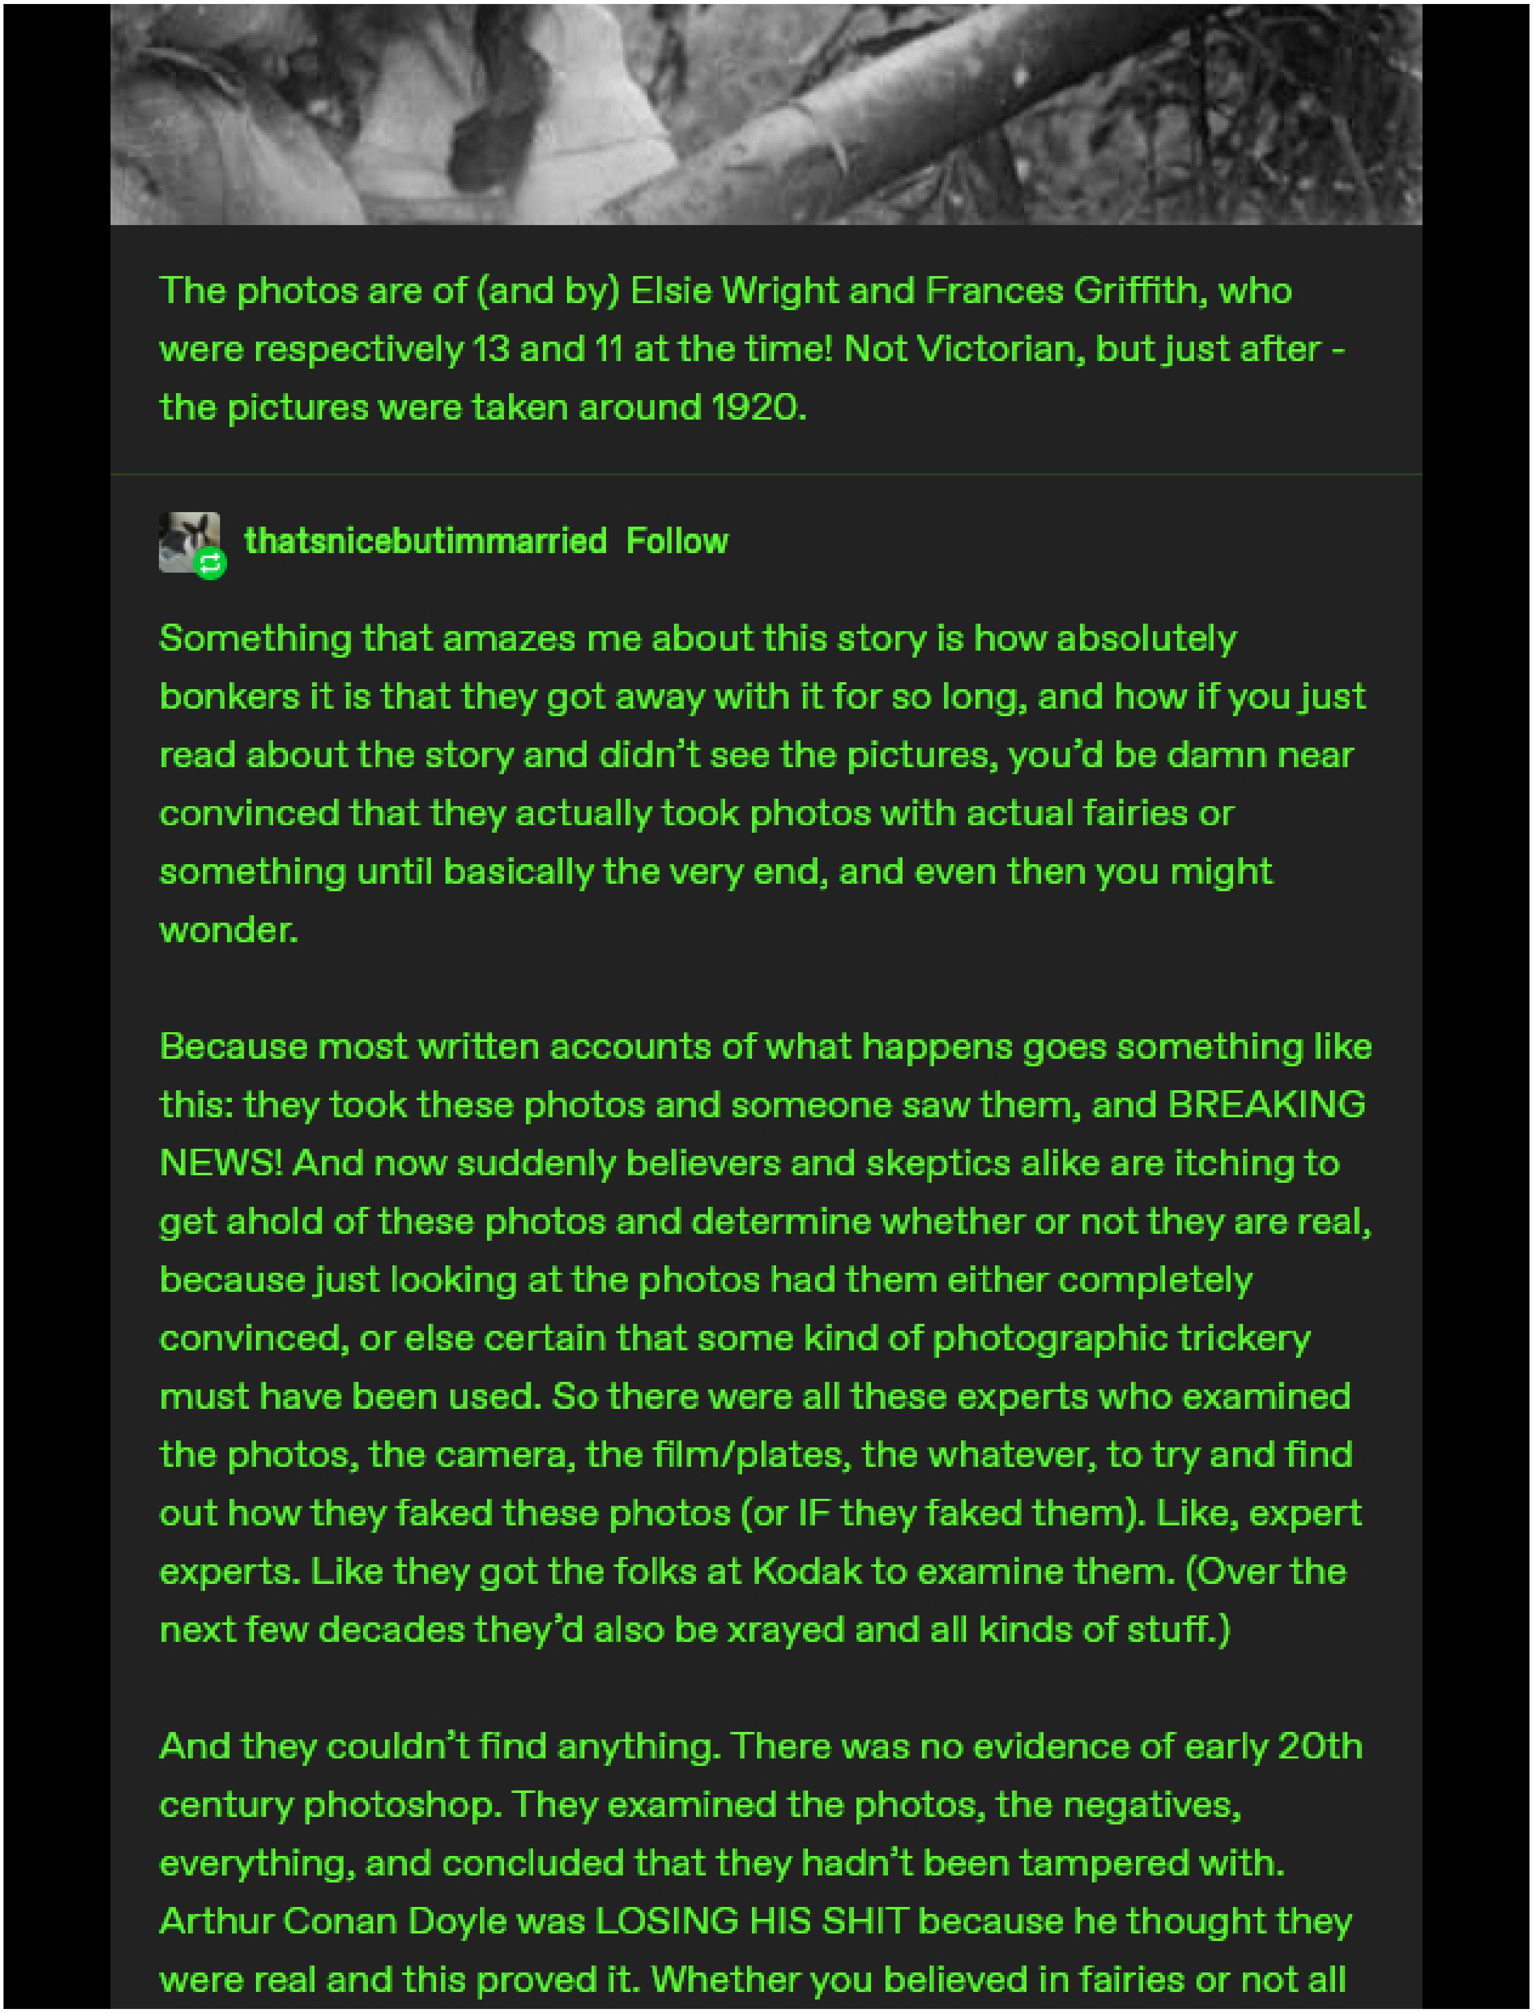
i want to shake those two little Victorian girl bitchs hands who faked the pictures of themselves playing with fairies and thank them for paving the way.

supposedlywizards Follow

OP can we please see the pictures

niksofficial





The photos are of (and by) Elsie Wright and Frances Griffith, who were respectively 13 and 11 at the time! Not Victorian, but just after - the pictures were taken around 1920.

thatsnicebutimmarried Follow

Something that amazes me about this story is how absolutely bonkers it is that they got away with it for so long, and how if you just read about the story and didn't see the pictures, you'd be damn near convinced that they actually took photos with actual fairies or something until basically the very end, and even then you might wonder.

Because most written accounts of what happens goes something like this: they took these photos and someone saw them, and BREAKING NEWS! And now suddenly believers and skeptics alike are itching to get ahold of these photos and determine whether or not they are real, because just looking at the photos had them either completely convinced, or else certain that some kind of photographic trickery must have been used. So there were all these experts who examined the photos, the camera, the film/plates, the whatever, to try and find out how they faked these photos (or IF they faked them). Like, expert experts. Like they got the folks at Kodak to examine them. (Over the next few decades they'd also be xrayed and all kinds of stuff.)

And they couldn't find anything. There was no evidence of early 20th century photoshop. They examined the photos, the negatives, everything, and concluded that they hadn't been tampered with. Arthur Conan Doyle was LOSING HIS SHIT because he thought they were real and this proved it. Whether you believed in fairies or not all the experts were coming to the conclusion that the photos were totally real, and the skeptics were getting really really mad about it. Because there was no way these photos were real! Except they totally seemed to be! And the girls were sticking by their story. (And actually Elsie and Frances were 16 and 9 respectively, when the first two photos were taken in mid-1917, and the photos became public in mid 1919.)

Doyle was still losing his goddamn mind and so to put the matter to rest, another believer went to them in 1920, bringing cameras and stuff for them to photograph fairies with. The thinking was that if they were using equipment that had been examined and everything beforehand, and then developed not by the girls, then the opportunity for fakery was cut out and they could determine the truth. And lo and behold, the three pictures they girls took (alone, because "the fairies won't show up if we're not alone"), were also verified as being real!!! Okay, okay, you don't believe in fairies, and believe the photos have to be fake, but still, there is the mystery of how did they do it???

And if that is what you read it's understandable to be thinking that woah, what did these girls capture on film? Were these children just on to some advanced af photo trickery? What advanced technique did these kids figure out that fooled all the experts? Did they really actually capture pictures of something supernatural?

No. They fuckin cut some drawings of fairies out of paper and took pictures with them. There was no trickery detected with the photos or photo equipment because they didn't have to fake that part. They were genuine photographs....of little girls with propped up drawings. Elsie copied some drawings from a book, added wings, cut them out, and propped them up. You look at these photos today and they look fake as fuck. These are obviously little drawings. They do not look the slightest bit realistic. There are people out there TODAY who will argue that it's totally possible that these girls took pictures of actual fairies. Because that's a better story, I guess. But if you hear that fairies. Because that's a better story, I guess. But if you hear that version of the story and then see the photos it's just laughable.

I can only assume that the reason anybody fell for it at all is the same reason that people praised the special effects in old movies that now look ridiculous.

But at the same time….nobody noticed that these fairies looked like children's book illustrations???? Like it took another fifty years for this to be put to rest, because even if you didn't believe they were real, NO ONE COULD FIGURE OUT HOW THEY COULD HAVE FAKED THEM. It wasn't until the fricken 80s when someone tracked down the girls that they admitted to having faked the photos by using little drawings. And even with that admission and the actual book they copied from, plus computer examination revealing that there were little strings and stuff holding the cutouts in place, there are STILL people who will maintain that these photos were real.

For their parts Elsie and Frances disagreed over the veracity of the fifth photogragh (not pictured here). Both claimed to have taken it, and Elsie said it was fake while Frances said it was real. (Even in the 80's.) The truth is most likely that it was a double exposure and so both girls did take it. Also they apparently kept up the lie because once they had fooled Arthur Conan Doyle they felt too weird about telling the truth. Seriously, EVEN THEY DIDN'T UNDERSTAND HOW THEY HAD FOOLED SO MANY GROWNUPS. THEY WEREN'T EVEN TRYING TO PULL A HOAX.

Read that last sentence again. They really weren't. They were just trying to take some fun little photos. And ALL THESE GODDAMN ADULTS WERE FREAKING THE FUCK OUT THINKING THAT THEY HAD PHOTOGRAPHED ACTUAL FAIRIES. AND IT WAS SUCH AN AWKWARD SITUATION THAT THE GIRLS JUST WENT WITH IT. They didn't keep it up for money or fame or pride, they kept up the hoax because it would be too awkward to tell the grownups they'd fooled them.

THEY CREATED A MYSTERY THAT LASTED LIKE 50 YEARS BECAUSE THEY DIDN'T KNOW WHAT TO DO IN AN AWKWARD SITUATION.

Frances straight up said: "I never even thought of it as being a fraud – it was just Elsie and I having a bit of fun and I can't understand to this day why they were taken in – they wanted to be taken in."

TL;DR: Two kids were dicking around with a camera and some fairy drawings, accidentally fool top experts in the world with super fake looking photos, feel too awkward at having fooled so many smart people to admit that it was all fake until a few years before their deaths. True. Icons.

eruvadhril Follow

"They even fooled Arthur Conan Doyle!" is a less-impressive statement when you remember that Doyle was friends with Harry Houdini, the famous illusionist, and was convinced that Houdini had actual magical powers. Houdini would specifically go out of his way to perform seances and other spiritualist events with the intent of demonstrating how they were achieved with mundane trickery rather than magic or connection to spirits, and Doyle's reaction was "Holy shit, Houdini has actual magic powers and is in denial about it".

The U.S. Is Retreating from Religion

By 2030, say projections, a third of Americans will have no religious preference

BLOGS.SCIENTIFICAMERICAN.COM

By: Allen Downey

Published: Oct 20, 2017

> Since 1990, the fraction of Americans with no religious affiliation has nearly tripled, from about 8 percent to 22 percent. Over the next 20 years, this trend will accelerate: by 2020, there will be more of these "Nones" than Catholics, and by 2035, they will outnumber Protestants.
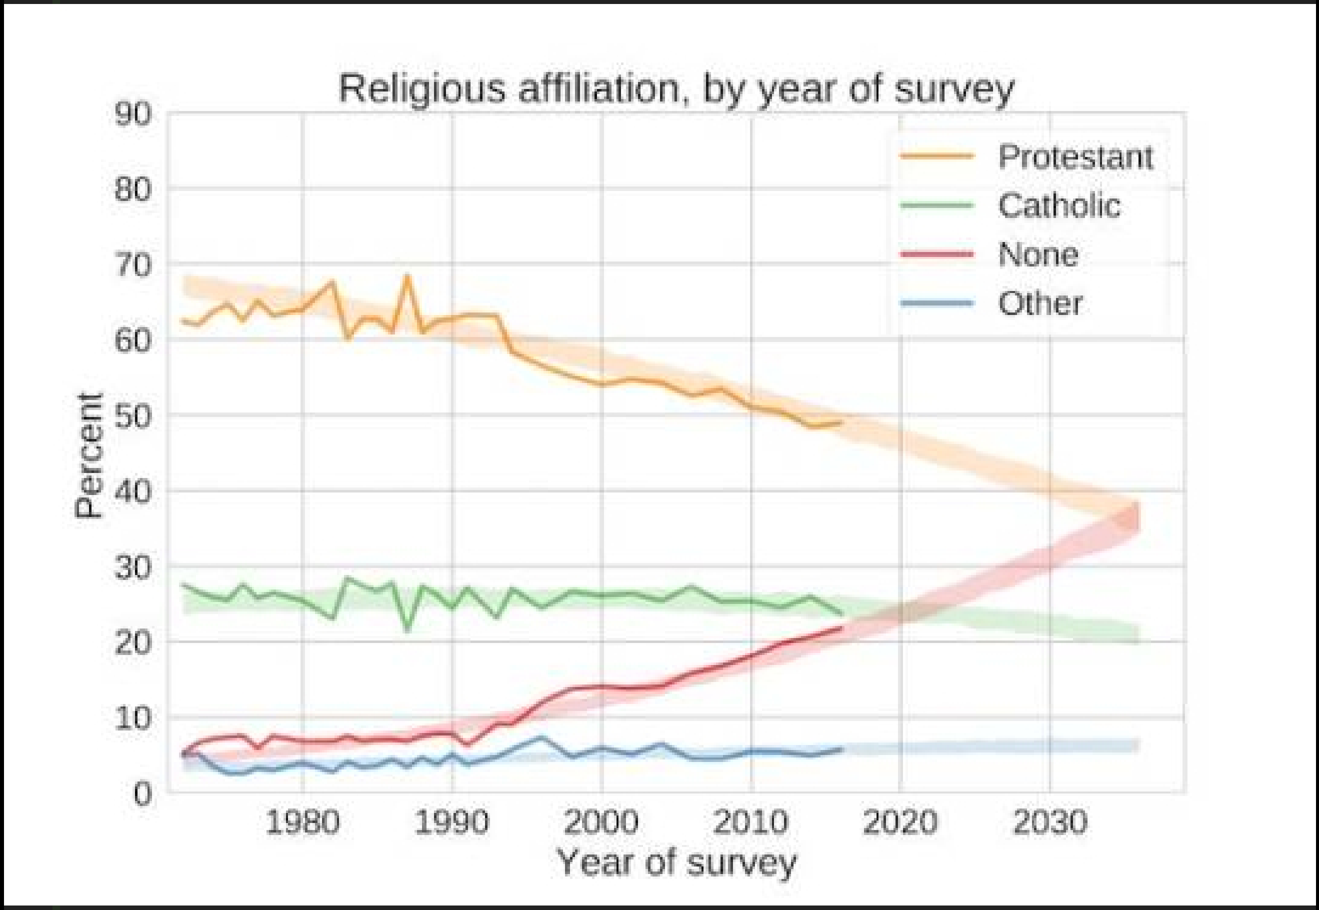
> The following figure shows changes since 1972 and these predictions, based on data from the General Social Survey (GSS):



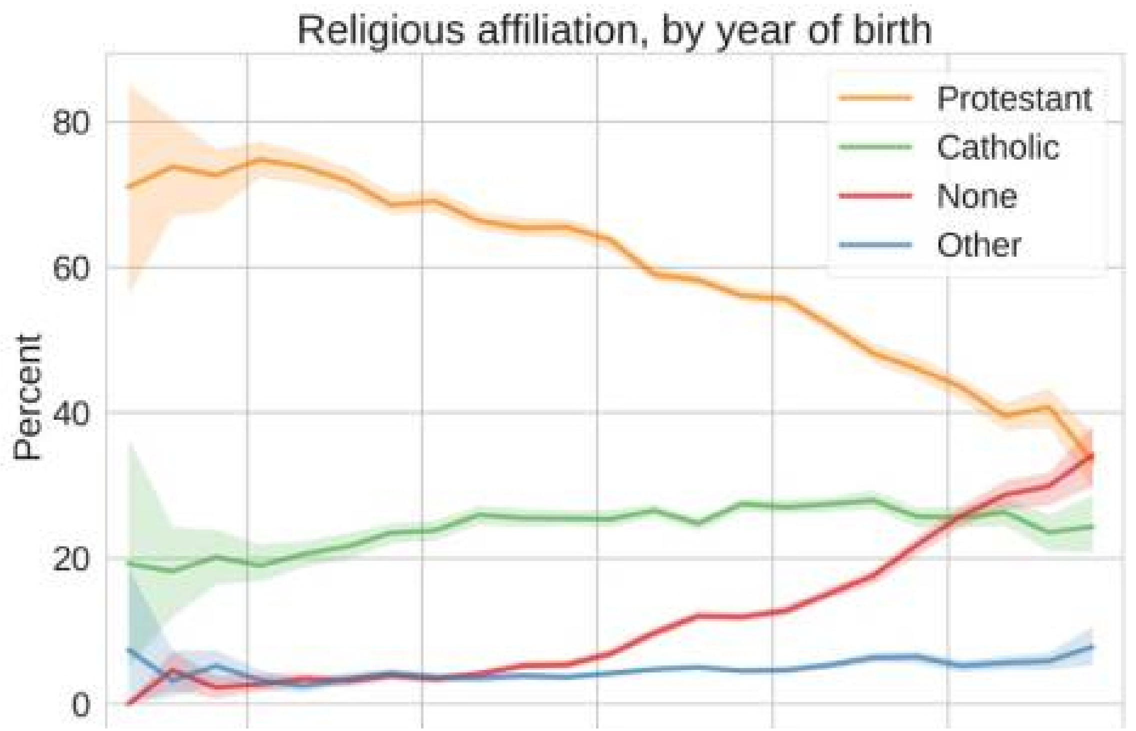
> The GSS, which surveys 1,000–2,000 adults in the U.S. per year, includes questions related to religious beliefs and attitudes.

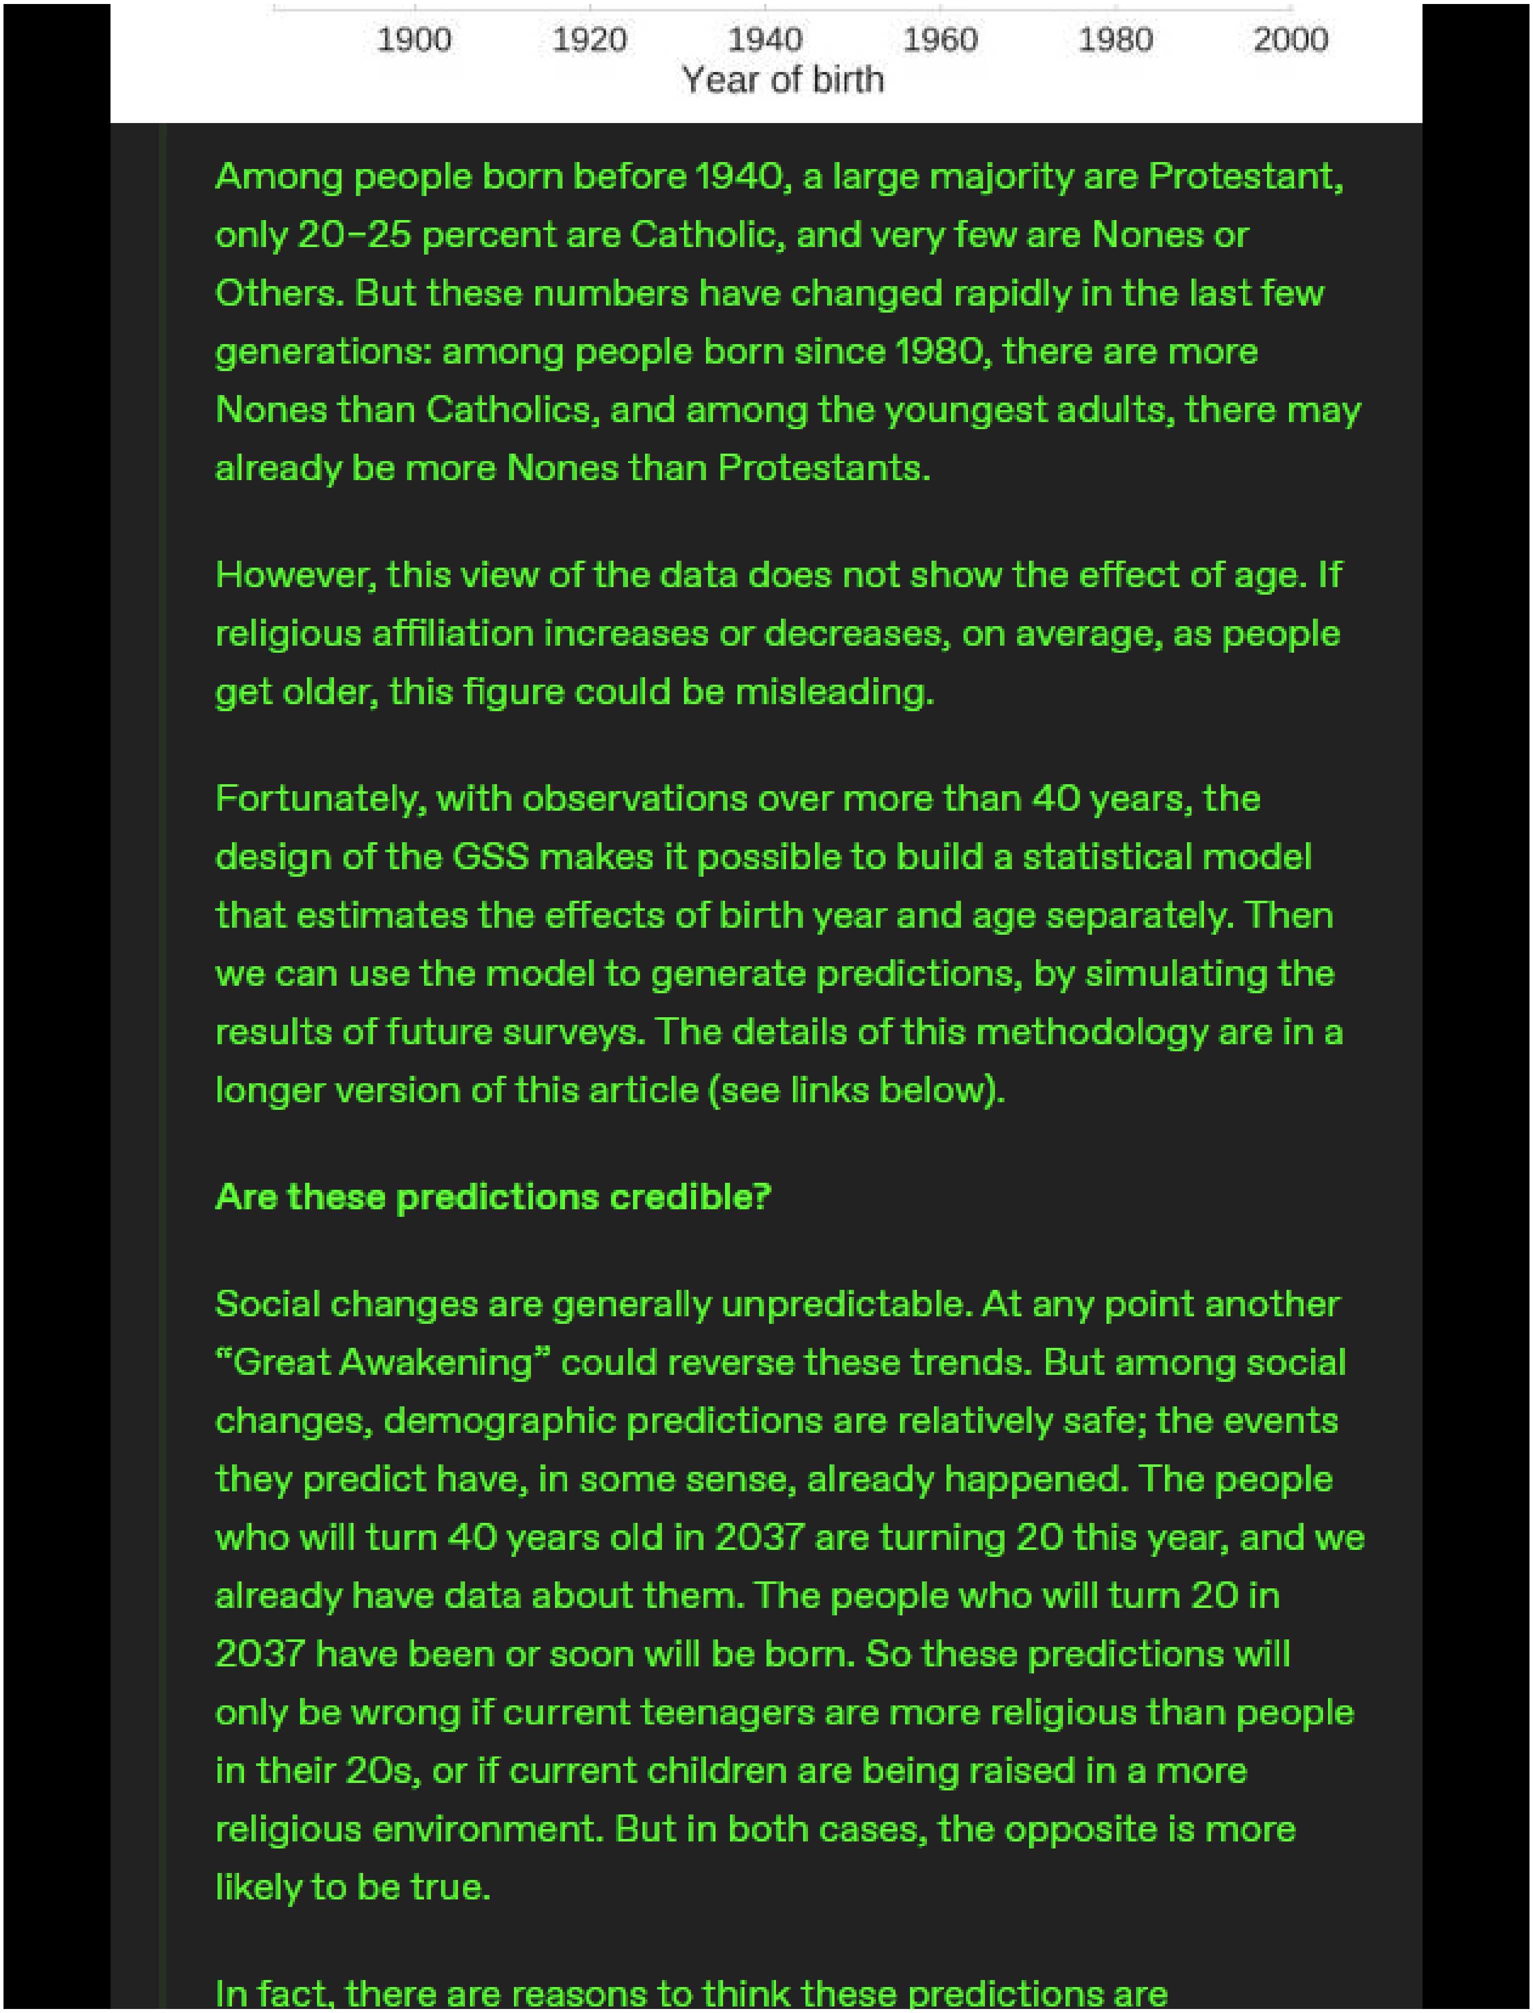
Regarding religious affiliation, it asks "What is your religious preference: is it Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, some other religion, or no religion?"

In the figure, the dark lines show the fraction of respondents in each group for each year of the survey until 2016. The shaded areas show predictions, based on a statistical model of the relationship between year of birth, age, and religion.

Religious beliefs are primarily determined by the environment people grow up in, including their family life and wider social influences. Although some people change religious affiliation later in life, most do not, so changes in the population are largely due to generational replacement.

We can get a better view of generational changes if we group people by their year of birth, which captures information about the environment they grew up in, including the probability that they were raised in a religious tradition and their likely exposure to people of other religions. The following figure shows the share of people in each religious group, for birth years from 1880 to 1995:





Among people born before 1940, a large majority are Protestant, only 20–25 percent are Catholic, and very few are Nones or Others. But these numbers have changed rapidly in the last few generations: among people born since 1980, there are more Nones than Catholics, and among the youngest adults, there may already be more Nones than Protestants.

However, this view of the data does not show the effect of age. If religious affiliation increases or decreases, on average, as people get older, this figure could be misleading.

Fortunately, with observations over more than 40 years, the design of the GSS makes it possible to build a statistical model that estimates the effects of birth year and age separately. Then we can use the model to generate predictions, by simulating the results of future surveys. The details of this methodology are in a longer version of this article (see links below).

Are these predictions credible?

Social changes are generally unpredictable. At any point another “Great Awakening” could reverse these trends. But among social changes, demographic predictions are relatively safe; the events they predict have, in some sense, already happened. The people who will turn 40 years old in 2037 are turning 20 this year, and we already have data about them. The people who will turn 20 in 2037 have been or soon will be born. So these predictions will only be wrong if current teenagers are more religious than people in their 20s, or if current children are being raised in a more religious environment. But in both cases, the opposite is more likely to be true.

In fact, there are reasons to think these predictions are > conservative:

1. Survey results like these are subject to social desirability bias, which is the tendency of respondents to shade their answers in the direction they think is more socially acceptable. To the degree that apostasy is stigmatized, we expect these reports to underestimate the number of Nones. As the visibility of nonreligious people increases, they might be more willing to be counted; in that case, the trends would go faster than predicted.
2. The trends for Protestants and Nones have apparent points of inflection near 1990. Predictions that include earlier data are likely to underestimate future trends. If we use only data since 1990 to generate predictions, we expect the fraction of Nones to exceed 40 percent within 20 years.

> A longer version of this article is available from my blog, "Probably Overthinking It." It applies the same methods to predict changes in other aspects of religion: belief in God, interpretation of the Bible, and confidence in the people who run religious organizations.
> The data I used and all of my code are available in this Jupyter notebook.

We need to see that education and science literacy increase at least as much.

religion-is-a-mental-illness

True. Abandoning gods is a good start.

But countries full of antivax, anti-"chemical", Flat Earth, conspiracy theorist atheists who buy from Goop and rely on homeopathy, kale and energy crystals won't do us any good either.

There's also some indications that humans may be prone to religion or religious-like structures. They help give a sense of control over the universe (even if it's the illusion of control), find meaning, establish one's place in society, and enforce a group moral dynamic,

Even without gods, the tendency to seek or create these structures may still persist, just with god-substitutes. We're already seeing this play out somewhat in what's sometimes termed "secular religions". Although, since secularism is about separating religious beliefs from the functioning of the state, I'd argue this is an oxymoron - what they actually mean is "godless religions."

Alcoholics Anonymous, for example, specifies the need for an unspecified "higher power" but even if you remove this god-concept, the way it functions replicates some of the same aspects of religiosity. You can also see it in various racial superiority and/or authoritarian groups, and Woke activism.

So, killing the gods may not be the end of the matter.

Education, science literacy, reason, critical thinking skills... we need to be able to give people the tools to meet their human needs rather than succumbing to faith, ignorance, superstition and sophistry to repeat the same old cycles

i get dragged a lot for never having evolved beyond the online era of illegally downloading music. everyone else moved onto streaming services like Spotify or Pandora or whatever, but I never stopped hoarding MP3 files on my computer. I manually organize them and fill out their metadata, track down and apply the album art, and then I sync them to my phone. or iPod, back in the day people keep trying to give me arguments as to why I should stream my tunes like everyone else but none of them make sense to me. “You’ll free up storage” my entire music library takes up 3.38 GB out of my phone’s 512 GB capacity I think I’m good “you can download the songs and listen offline if you’re so worried about losing connection!” Yeah or I could keep doing what I’m already doing where my songs are.. literally already downloaded and will now and forever be available offline? “Removing the ads is not very expensive” I have never paid a single cent for ad-free music in my life why would I change that “I just have sooo much music that I like and it has everything !” I like a ton of music too and I have never Not been able to find+download a song that I want. in fact, switching to a service would probably leave me without quite a few songs that I love in my library. Can you promise me that Spotify will be able to find this very specific Super Smash Brothers 10 minute long Trap Remix that I’ve been listening to for like 5 years ??? Can you look me in the eye and swear to me ??????

“You wouldn’t have to organize the files and get all the info and album art yourself” I fucking love doing that Do NOT take that away from me “it’s how I find new music” listen I know I’ve got Disorders and Symptoms but I have to be in a very specific mood to listen to new music and if I'm not in that mood it's too anxiety inducing and I refuse. "I like having songs picked out for me" I have been listening to the same handful of songs on repeat for months and I am so happy and if anyone tried to play something else when I'm in my Tunes Loop I would bite them and at this point? one of my biggest reasons for not even TRYING music streaming of any kind is because of how exasperated it makes others and that brings me such pure joy :) does my silly little mp3 hoard make you mad? does it make you want to hurt me? have fun thinking about it while you listen to 30 seconds of unskippable ads in between songs you didn't want to listen to

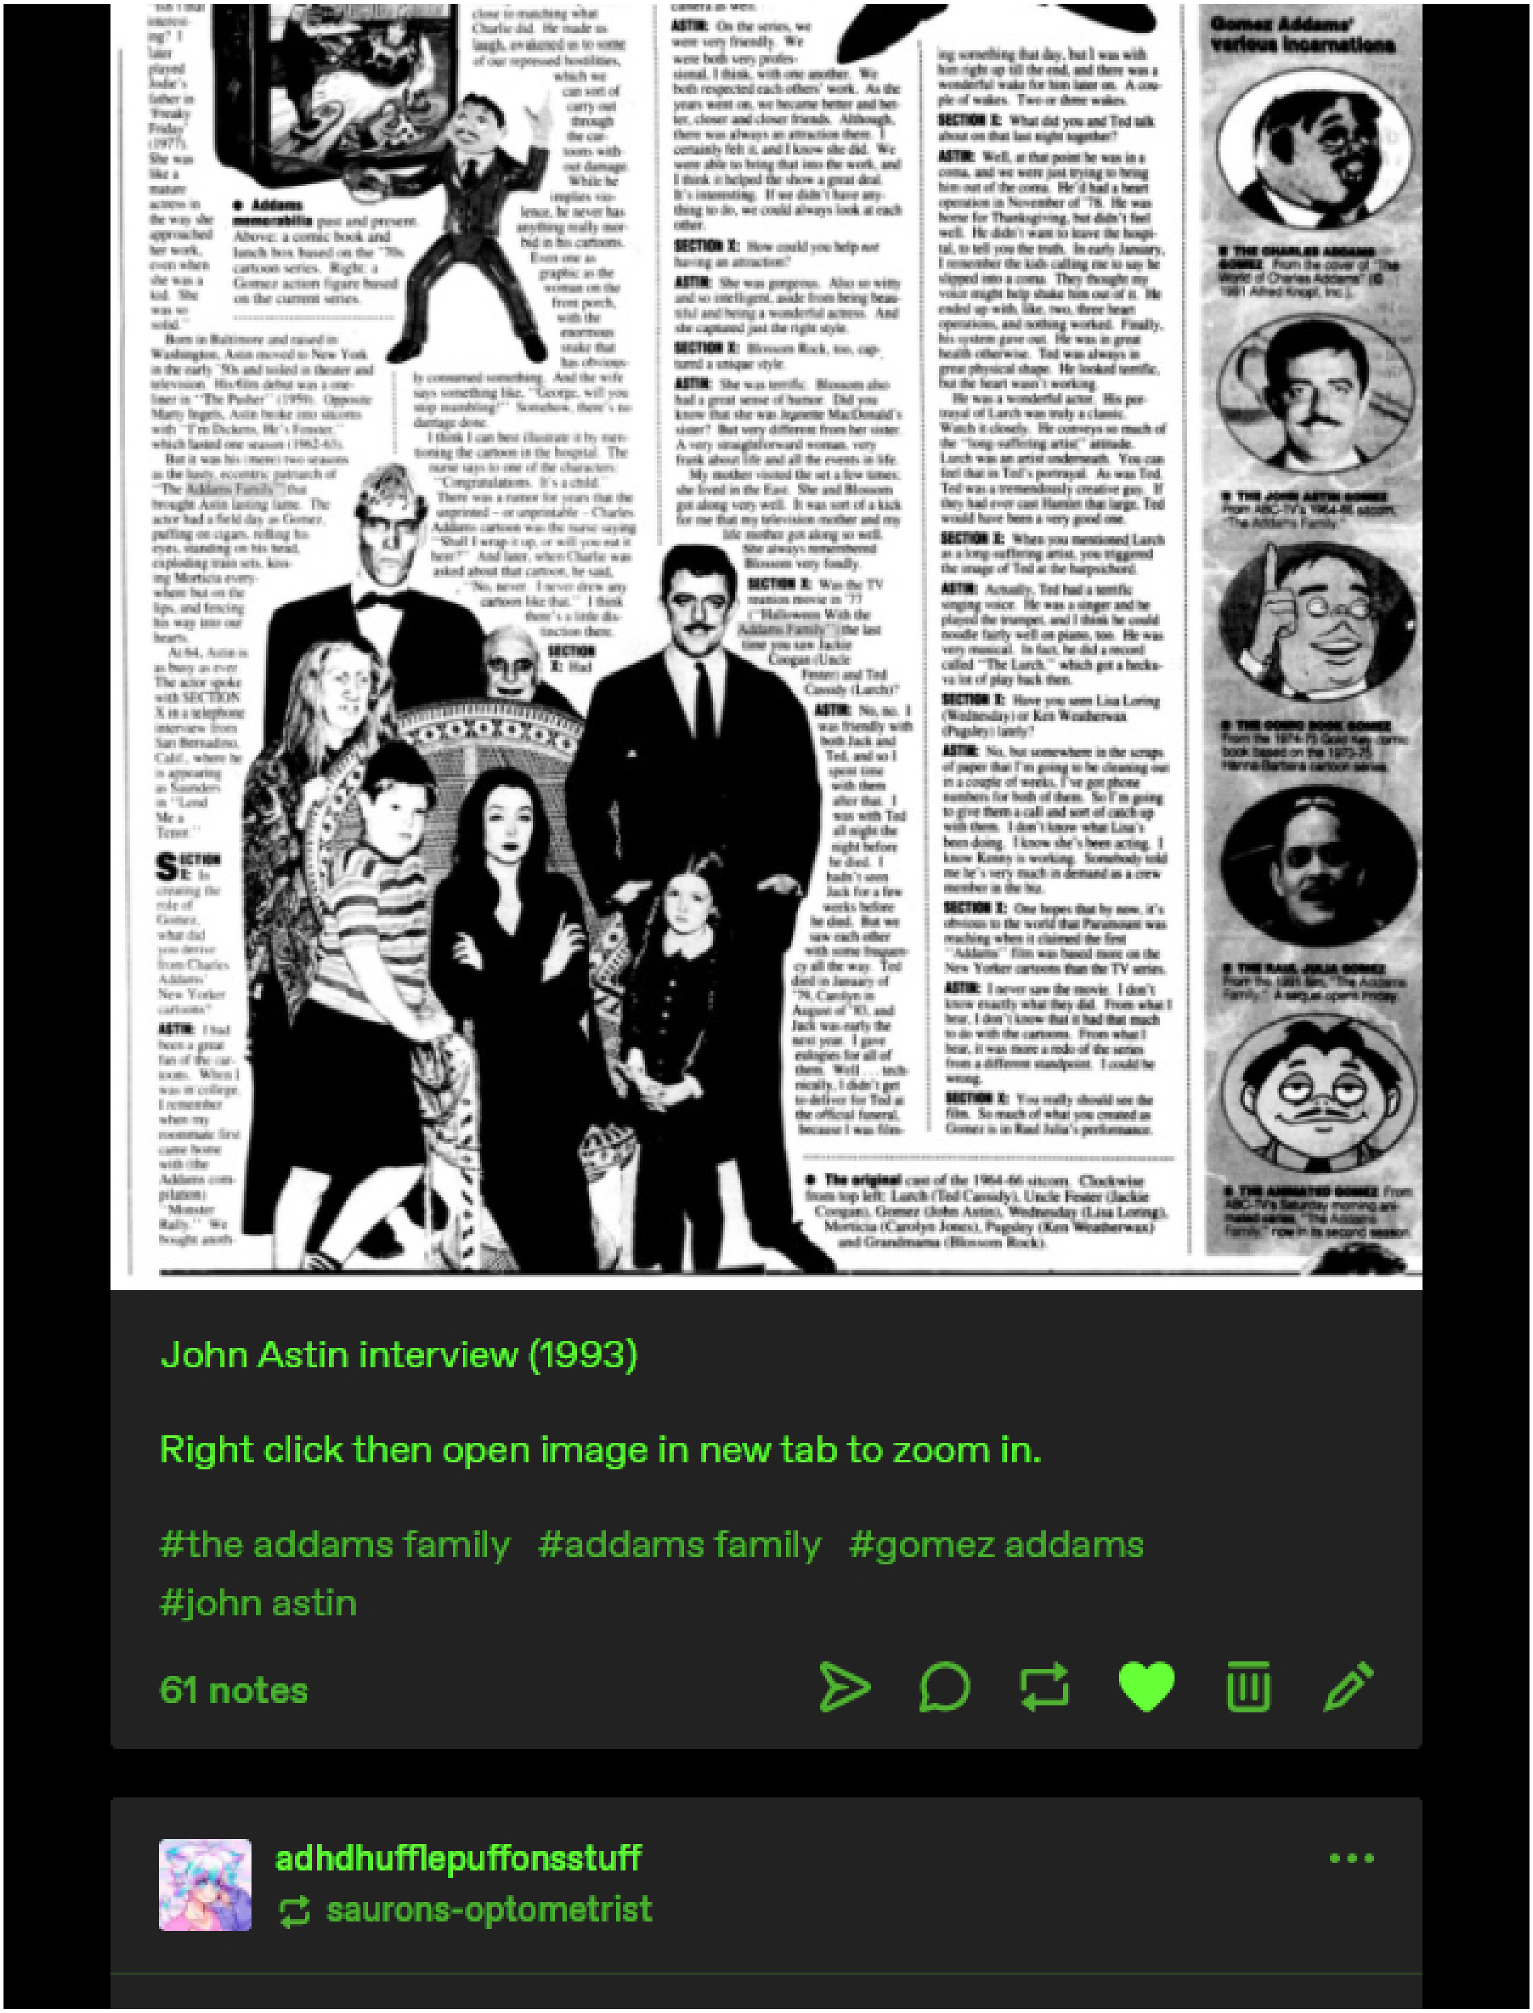
SECTION X

Gomez Addams

Emmy-nominated for his cartoon retake on Gomez John Astin tells how he created the role

By MARK VOGER
PRESS STAFF WRITER

GOMEZ A GO-GO



"Isn't that interesting?" I later played Jodie's father in "Freaky Friday" (1977). She was like a mature actress in the way she approached her work, even when she was a kid. She was so solid."

Born in Baltimore and raised in Washington, Astin moved to New York in the early '50s and toiled in theater and television. His film debut was a one-liner in "The Pusher" (1959). Opposite Marty Ingels, Astin broke into sitcoms with "I'm Dickens, He's Fenster," which lasted one season (1962-63).

But it was his (mere) two seasons as the lusty, eccentric patriarch of "The Addams Family" that brought Astin lasting fame. The actor had a field day as Gomez, puffing on cigars, rolling his eyes, standing on his head, exploding train sets, kissing Morticia everywhere but on the lips, and fencing his way into our hearts.

At 64, Astin is as busy as ever. The actor spoke with SECTION X in a telephone interview from San Bernadino, Calif., where he is appearing as Saunders in "Lend Me a Tenor."

SECTION X: In creating the role of Gomez, what did you derive from Charles Addams' New Yorker cartoons?

ASTIN: I had been a great fan of the cartoons. When I was in college, I remember when my roommate first came home with (the Addams compilation) "Monster Rally." We bought anothclose to matching what Charlie did. He made us laugh, awakened us to some of our repressed hostilities, which we can sort of carry out through the cartoons without damage. While he implies violence, he never has anything really morbid in his cartoons. Even one as graphic as the woman on the front porch, with the enormous snake that has obviously consumed something. And the wife says something like, "George, will you stop mumbling?" Somehow, there's no damage done.

I think I can best illustrate it by mentioning the cartoon in the hospital. The nurse says to one of the characters: "Congratulations. It's a child."

There was a rumor for years that the unprinted – or unprintable – Charles Addams cartoon was the nurse saying "Shall I wrap it up, or will you eat it here?" And later, when Charlie was asked about that cartoon, he said, "No, never. I never drew any cartoon like that." I think there's a little distinction there.

SECTION X: Had

camera as well.

ASTIN: On the series, we were very friendly. We were both very professional, I think, with one another. We both respected each others' work. As the years went on, we became better and better, closer and closer friends. Although, there was always an attraction there. I certainly felt it, and I know she did. We were able to bring that into the work, and I think it helped the show a great deal. It's interesting. If we didn't have anything to do, we could always look at each other.

SECTION X: How could you help not having an attraction?

ASTIN: She was gorgeous. Also so witty and so intelligent, aside from being beautiful and being a wonderful actress. And she captured just the right style.

SECTION X: Blossom Rock, too, captured a unique style.

ASTIN: She was terrific. Blossom also had a great sense of humor. Did you know that she was Jeanette MacDonald's sister? But very different from her sister. A very straightforward woman, very frank about life and all the events in life.

My mother visited the set a few times; she lived in the East. She and Blossom got along very well. It was sort of a kick for me that my television mother and my life mother got along so well. She always remembered Blossom very fondly.

SECTION X: Was the TV reunion movie in '77 ("Halloween With the Addams Family") the last time you saw Jackie Coogan (Uncle Fester) and Ted Cassidy (Lurch)?

ASTIN: No, no. I was friendly with both Jack and Ted, and so I spent time with them after that. I was with Ted all night the night before he died. I hadn't seen Jack for a few weeks before he died. But we saw each other with some frequency all the way. Ted died in January of '79, Carolyn in August of '83, and Jack was early the next year. I gave eulogies for all of them. Well . . . technically, I didn't get to deliver for Ted at the official funeral, because I was filming something that day, but I was with him right up till the end, and there was a wonderful wake for him later on. A couple of wakes. Two or three wakes.

SECTION X: What did you and Ted talk about on that last night together?

ASTIN: Well, at that point he was in a coma, and we were just trying to bring him out of the coma. He'd had a heart operation in November of '78. He was home for Thanksgiving, but didn't feel well. He didn't want to leave the hospital, to tell you the truth. In early January, I remember the kids calling me to say he slipped into a coma. They thought my voice might help shake him out of it. He ended up with, like, two, three heart operations, and nothing worked. Finally, his system gave out. He was in great health otherwise. Ted was always in great physical shape. He looked terrific, but the heart wasn't working.

He was a wonderful actor. His portrayal of Lurch was truly a classic. Watch it closely. He conveys so much of the "long-suffering artist" attitude. Lurch was an artist underneath. You can feel that in Ted's portrayal. As was Ted. Ted was a tremendously creative guy. If they had ever cast Hamlet that large, Ted would have been a very good one.

SECTION X: When you mentioned Lurch as a long-suffering artist, you triggered the image of Ted at the harpsichord.

ASTIN: Actually, Ted had a terrific singing voice. He was a singer and he played the trumpet, and I think he could noodle fairly well on piano, too. He was very musical. In fact, he did a record called "The Lurch," which got a heckuva lot of play back then.

SECTION X: Have you seen Lisa Loring (Wednesday) or Ken Weatherwax (Pugsley) lately?

ASTIN: No, but somewhere in the scraps of paper that I'm going to be cleaning out in a couple of weeks, I've got phone numbers for both of them. So I'm going to give them a call and sort of catch up with them. I don't know what Lisa's been doing. I know she's been acting. I know Kenny is working. Somebody told me he's very much in demand as a crew member in the biz.

SECTION X: One hopes that by now, it's obvious to the world that Paramount was reaching when it claimed the first "Addams" film was based more on the New Yorker cartoons than the TV series.

ASTIN: I never saw the movie. I don't know exactly what they did. From what I hear, I don't know that it had that much to do with the cartoons. From what I hear, it was more a redo of the series from a different standpoint. I could be wrong.

SECTION X: You really should see the film. So much of what you created as Gomez is in Raul Julia's performance.

this is a thing! danah boyd is a researcher who has been studying social media for over a decade and in her 2014 book it's complicated she argues that teenage social media "addiction" (which she also contends is like.....not actually a thing) is a result of the fact that "today's teenagers have less freedom to wander than any previous generation" because "parents argue that these restrictions are necessary in an increasingly dangerous society, even though the data suggest that contemporary youth face fewer dangers than they did twenty years ago."

as a result, teenagers are reclaiming these lost social spaces (which their parents and grandparents had in the form of mall hangouts, drive-in theaters, after school parking lots, etc) by using social media, where they can continue to "engage in crucial aspects of maturation: self-presentation, managing social relationships, and developing an understanding of the world around them," aka stuff that teens are Supposed to be doing

When I was 19 or 20, I sewed myself a wool dress for medieval re-enactments. I hated it almost as soon as I put it on. The bodice was cut wrong; the lacing was uneven; the colour was garish; the front closure was historically inaccurate; the embellishments were sewn on with terrible thread. Wearing it, I was constantly aware of its myriad flaws.

Then in my twenties I hit my adult metabolism and didn't fit into any of my old clothes anymore. I gave my old dresses to my foster mother, who sells costumes for a living, and the green dress sold. It entered the local medieval re-enactment secondhand economy.

Every time I go to an event, someone different is wearing my green dress. It draws my eyes because it's a lovely colour and the fabric—real wool and enough of it—moves beautifully with the wearer's body. I never recognize it at first, because every wearer has worn it a different way; it can be mixed and matched, dressed up and down, moved around a good century of history. From ten feet away its lacing looks elegant, its embellishments beautiful gracenotes. I think: Oh my god, that dress looks beautiful. Wait a minute, that's MY DRESS.

That dress teaches me, every time I see it, to stop looking at myself through such critical eyes. That dress doesn't just look good, it looks better than most other dresses in its category, because I put in the time and the effort (including using pliers to force a needle through six layers of wool) to make sure it was done right.

It's my reminder that sometimes the things I do are actually good, and if I indulge my natural tendency to criticize myself in everything, I'll end up missing when I'm actually awesome.

Well, you see, my mother was a mermaid, and my father was a minotaur.
@pet_foolery

Riiight. And let me guess: you got the human half from both of them.
Exactly!
Gotcha. Hardy har har.
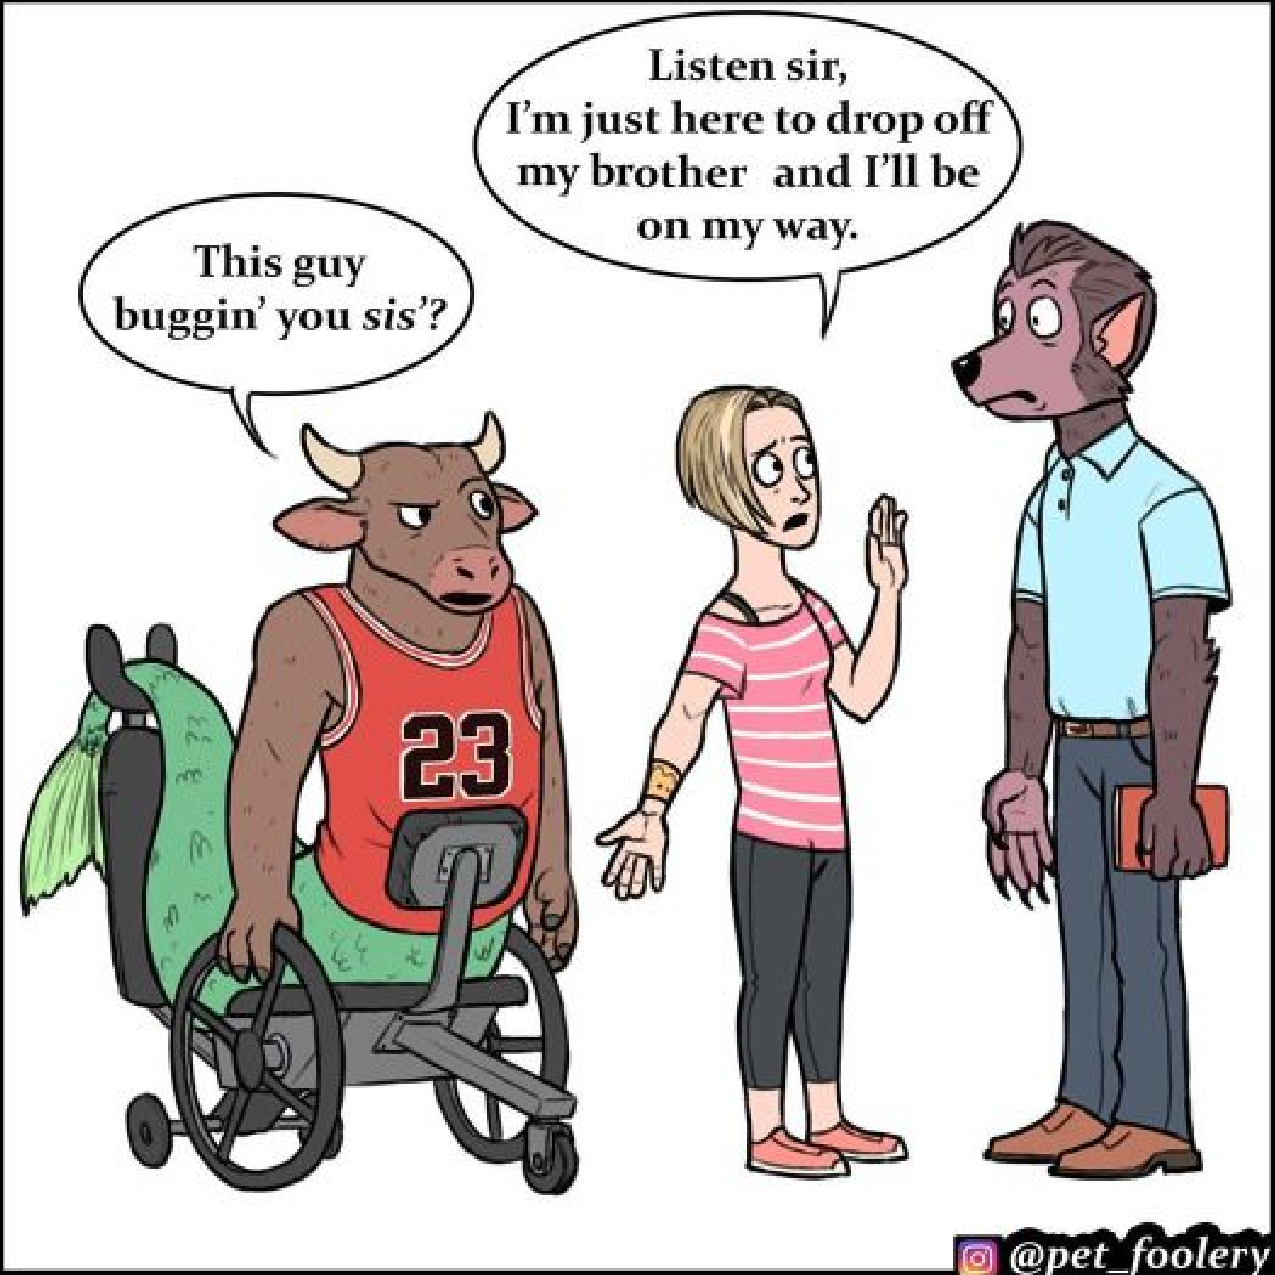
@pet_foolery
Ya know, it's insensitive mockery like this that makes us need these groups in the first place.
Huh?

@pet_foolery



Listen sir,
I'm just here to drop off my brother and I'll be on my way.
This guy buggin' you sis'?

MMMMM, the LAYERS to this.

She's technically a monster too. She might not look it at first glance and seems mostly human, but it isn't deniable even despite her looks compared to the other monsters.

But she realizes that she is still not like the rest of the monsters either and may not have entirely the same experiences as them, which is why she feels that she might not belong to or deserve to go to the support group. By sometimes passing as human, she feels she isn't worthy of the space.

The sad reality though is even though she's mostly human in appearance, that tail she has undeniably would still cause her some struggle. Humans are still gonna look at that tail and think she's a freak. There are probably still accommodations she needs because of the tail that she may still struggle to have access to. Even if it is just the tail, that tail is still enough to other her from humans and cause her problems and discrimination.

She should get to belong in that support group even if she gets told she's not monster "enough". She still shares some of the same struggles as them that are caused by being a monster, and needs support.

This is an excellent demonstration of the flaws in the concept of passing privilege. Bravo to the artist.

i watched this video essay earlier this morning and ‘immortality is a metaphor for queerness in the old guard’ took me the fuck out, like. i’ve been joking since forever that there are no straight immortals but i never took that thought any further and just

- the guard being ‘outed’ as immortal by a cia agent
- nile being shunned by friends/colleagues in the military when they discover she’s immortal
- immortals being invisible to history despite helping make history
- ‘booker wants to be rid of his immortality via a medical procedure because his family hated and rejected him for being immortal’ came into my house and shot me in the kneecap
- the guard metaphorically going back in time through copley’s wall and seeing key moments of their past in a new light aka a fundamentally queer experience and as @wondersmith-and-cons pointed out on discord it’s very

and as @wondersmith-and-sons pointed out on discord it's very likely that rucka didn't put this much thought into it, didn't. like. sit down to write the whole story around immortality as a metaphor for queerness, but we still landed on it and it's amazing

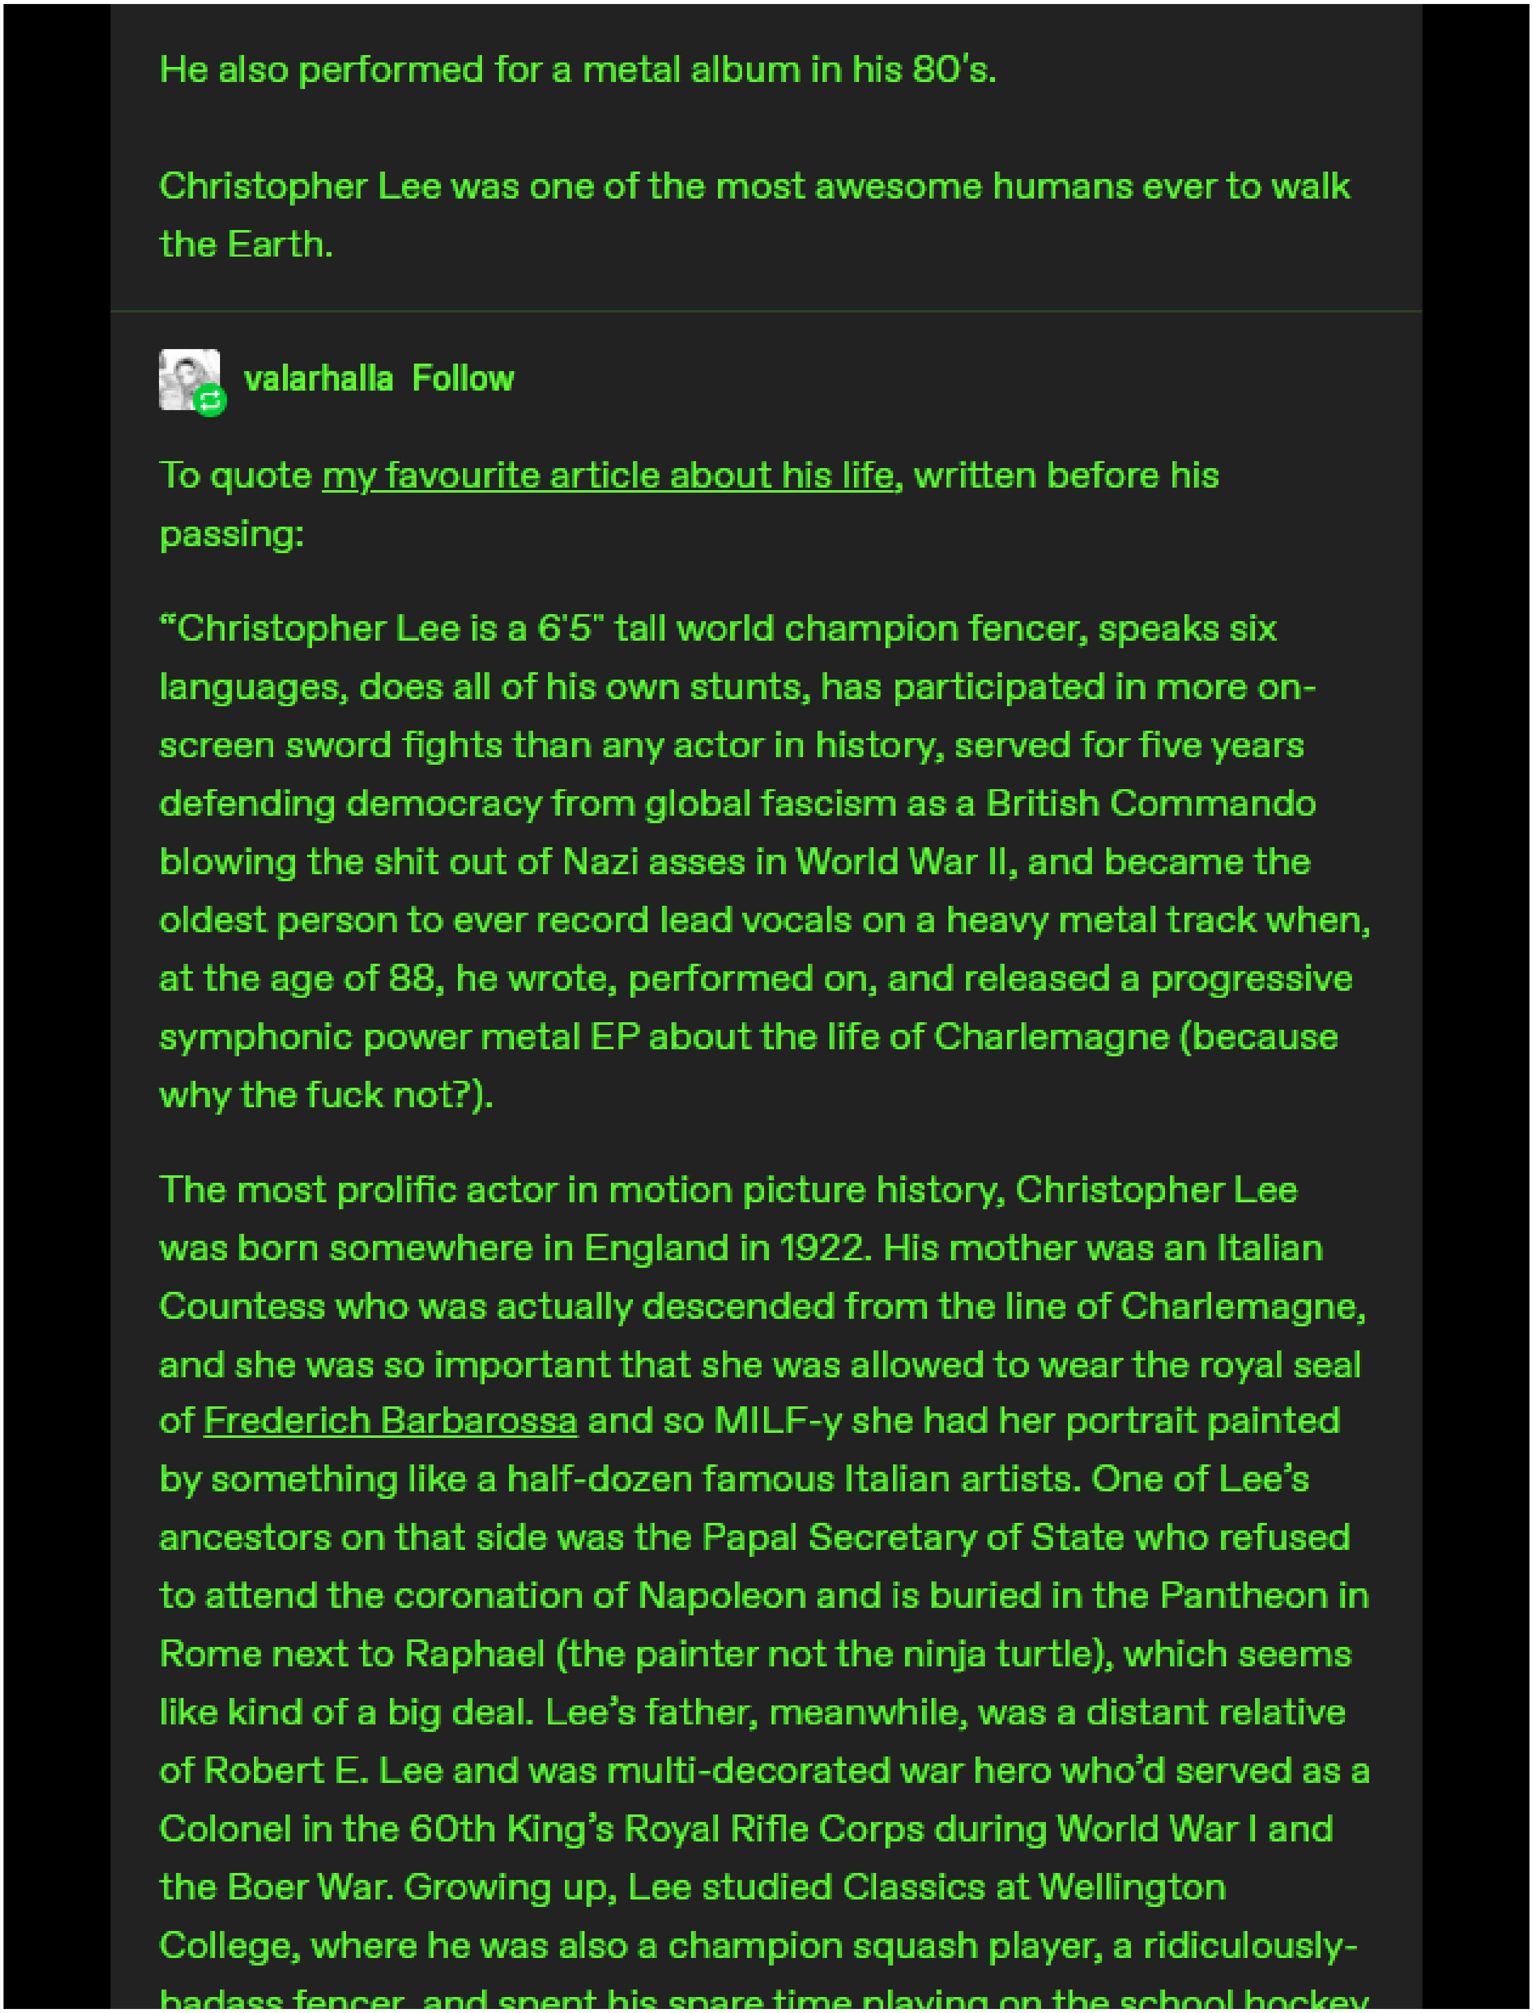
I will always remember Christopher Lee as that horrifying moment in the LOTR commentaries where Peter Jackson says he started to direct him on how to act like he'd been stabbed and Christopher Lee goes "no no peter dear, when someone is stabbed like this, THIS is how they look, they don't make a sound, air just leaves them all at once" and peter jackson remembers in that moment that lee was in the secret service and just slowly backs away.

dovewithscales Follow

Y'all… Christopher Lee was literally James Bond. He and Ian Fleming were cousins, he was one of the real life sources of inspiration for James Bond, and was Fleming's first choice to play Bond in the movies.

Saying that he was in the secret service doesn't do it justice. His unit was informally referred to as "The Ministry of Ungentlemanly Warfare" and his service records are still sealed.

When an interviewer asked him about his service, he asked "Can you keep a secret?" the interviewer of course said yes, so he leaned in, lowered his voice, and said "So can I."



He also performed for a metal album in his 80's.

Christopher Lee was one of the most awesome humans ever to walk the Earth.

valarhalla Follow

To quote my favourite article about his life, written before his passing:

“Christopher Lee is a 6'5" tall world champion fencer, speaks six languages, does all of his own stunts, has participated in more on-screen sword fights than any actor in history, served for five years defending democracy from global fascism as a British Commando blowing the shit out of Nazi asses in World War II, and became the oldest person to ever record lead vocals on a heavy metal track when, at the age of 88, he wrote, performed on, and released a progressive symphonic power metal EP about the life of Charlemagne (because why the fuck not?).

The most prolific actor in motion picture history, Christopher Lee was born somewhere in England in 1922. His mother was an Italian Countess who was actually descended from the line of Charlemagne, and she was so important that she was allowed to wear the royal seal of Frederich Barbarossa and so MILF-y she had her portrait painted by something like a half-dozen famous Italian artists. One of Lee’s ancestors on that side was the Papal Secretary of State who refused to attend the coronation of Napoleon and is buried in the Pantheon in Rome next to Raphael (the painter not the ninja turtle), which seems like kind of a big deal. Lee’s father, meanwhile, was a distant relative of Robert E. Lee and was multi-decorated war hero who’d served as a Colonel in the 60th King’s Royal Rifle Corps during World War I and the Boer War. Growing up, Lee studied Classics at Wellington College, where he was also a champion squash player, a ridiculously-badass fencer, and spent his spare time playing on the school hockey badass fencer, and spent his spare time playing on the school hockey and rugby.

Shit got real in 1939 when Christopher Lee quit his day job, caught a boat to Finland, and decided to enlist in the Finnish Army to help them fight off the Soviet invasion of Finland. Lee got geared up to kick some commie asses up and down the frozen wastes of mid-Winter Finland, but didn't see much action, returning home in 1940 to deal with a much bigger and more England-centric problem: Nazis. Christopher Lee enlisted in the Royal Air Force in 1940, where he worked as an intelligence officer specializing in cracking German ciphers and skulls and any other Nazi bullshit he came in contact with. In North Africa he was attached to the Long Range Desert Patrol, the forerunner of the SAS, where he would jump in a badass fucking four-wheel-drive jeep with a gigantic machine gun mounted in the back, drive hundreds of miles behind enemy lines, survive the scorching heat of the Sahara Desert, then sneak-attack Luftwaffe airfields by rolling up on them at sixty miles an hour with his .50-caliber machine guns blazing out curtains of white-hot Nazi-smiting justice, planting dynamite on their airplanes, then peeling ass out of there leaving nothing but bullet-riddled corpses and gigantic explosions in his wake. After working with the LRDP, Lee was assigned to the Special Operations Executive – better known as Winston Churchill's Ministry of Ungentlemanly Warfare – a group that did shit like lead a twelve-man assault that destroyed the German top secret nuclear weapons development facility in Norway and assist brave Eastern European partisans and rebels sabotage Nazi supply lines to prevent them from bringing reinforcements up to fight the Soviets. His service records are sealed and Lee doesn't talk much about his service (when pressed on the subject, he reportedly asks his interviewer, "Can you keep a secret?". When they excitedly say yes, he leans in close and says, "So can I."), but we do know that by the time he retired as a Flight Lieutenant in 1945 he'd been personally decorated for battlefield bravery by the Czech, Yugoslavian, English, and Polish governments and was good friends with Josip Broz Tito, so draw your own conclusions.

In addition to his iconic, definitive role as Dracula, Christopher Lee has also portrayed some of the most memorable villains of all time. Sure, everyone knows him as Sauroman the White from Lord of the Hobbits: Return to Fellowship Towers and Darth Tyranus from those otherwise-terrible Star Wars prequels… he played the ultimate Bond Villain in The Man with The Golden Gun – a role he got thanks in no small part to the fact that Bond creator Ian Fleming was not only Lee's cousin, but the two men had fought together in the SOE during WWII. So Lee was basically part of the team that inspired James Bond, then he went on to play a fucking Bond Villain

I won't get too much into it, but Christopher Lee has basically been in every movie ever, from billion-dollar Academy Award winners to the sort of shit that Elvira pimps on Channel 875 at four in the morning on a Tuesday. He's almost always the villain, and as such has probably died on camera more times than anyone ever. He's been Fu Manchu five times. He was the definitive Count de Rochefort in a couple Three Musketeers movies. He's been The Mummy, Frankenstein's Monster, Willy Wonka's Dad, the Emperor of China, the Grim Reaper, Lucifer, Grigory Rasputin, Charles Marlow, Ramses, Tiresias the Blind Prophet of Thebes, Vlad the Impaler, one role where he's simply credited as "Ship's Vampire", and another where he's "Resurrection Joe." He's hosted SNL and been in Police Academy, the Last Unicorn, Charlie's Angels, Season of the Witch, Gremlins II, a Polish Tales from the Crypt-style TV series and a softcore porn based on the works of Marquis de Sade, but he was also in Lord of the Rings, Shaka Zulu, A Tale of Two Cities, The Wicker Man, Moby-Dick and the Hamlet with Lawrence Olivier. He's worked with Peter Cushing, Jimmy Stewart, Charlton Heston, Errol Flynn, Patrick Stewart, Stephen Spielberg, Orson Welles, Vincent Price, Christopher Walken, Sam Eliot, Jeff Bridges and Jayne Mansfield, but also Nicholas Cage, Heather Graham, Sacha Baron Cohen, Tom Arnold, Casper Van Dien and Armand Assante, and he once appeared in a movie called "Howling II: Werewolf Bitch" with the dude from Space Mutiny.

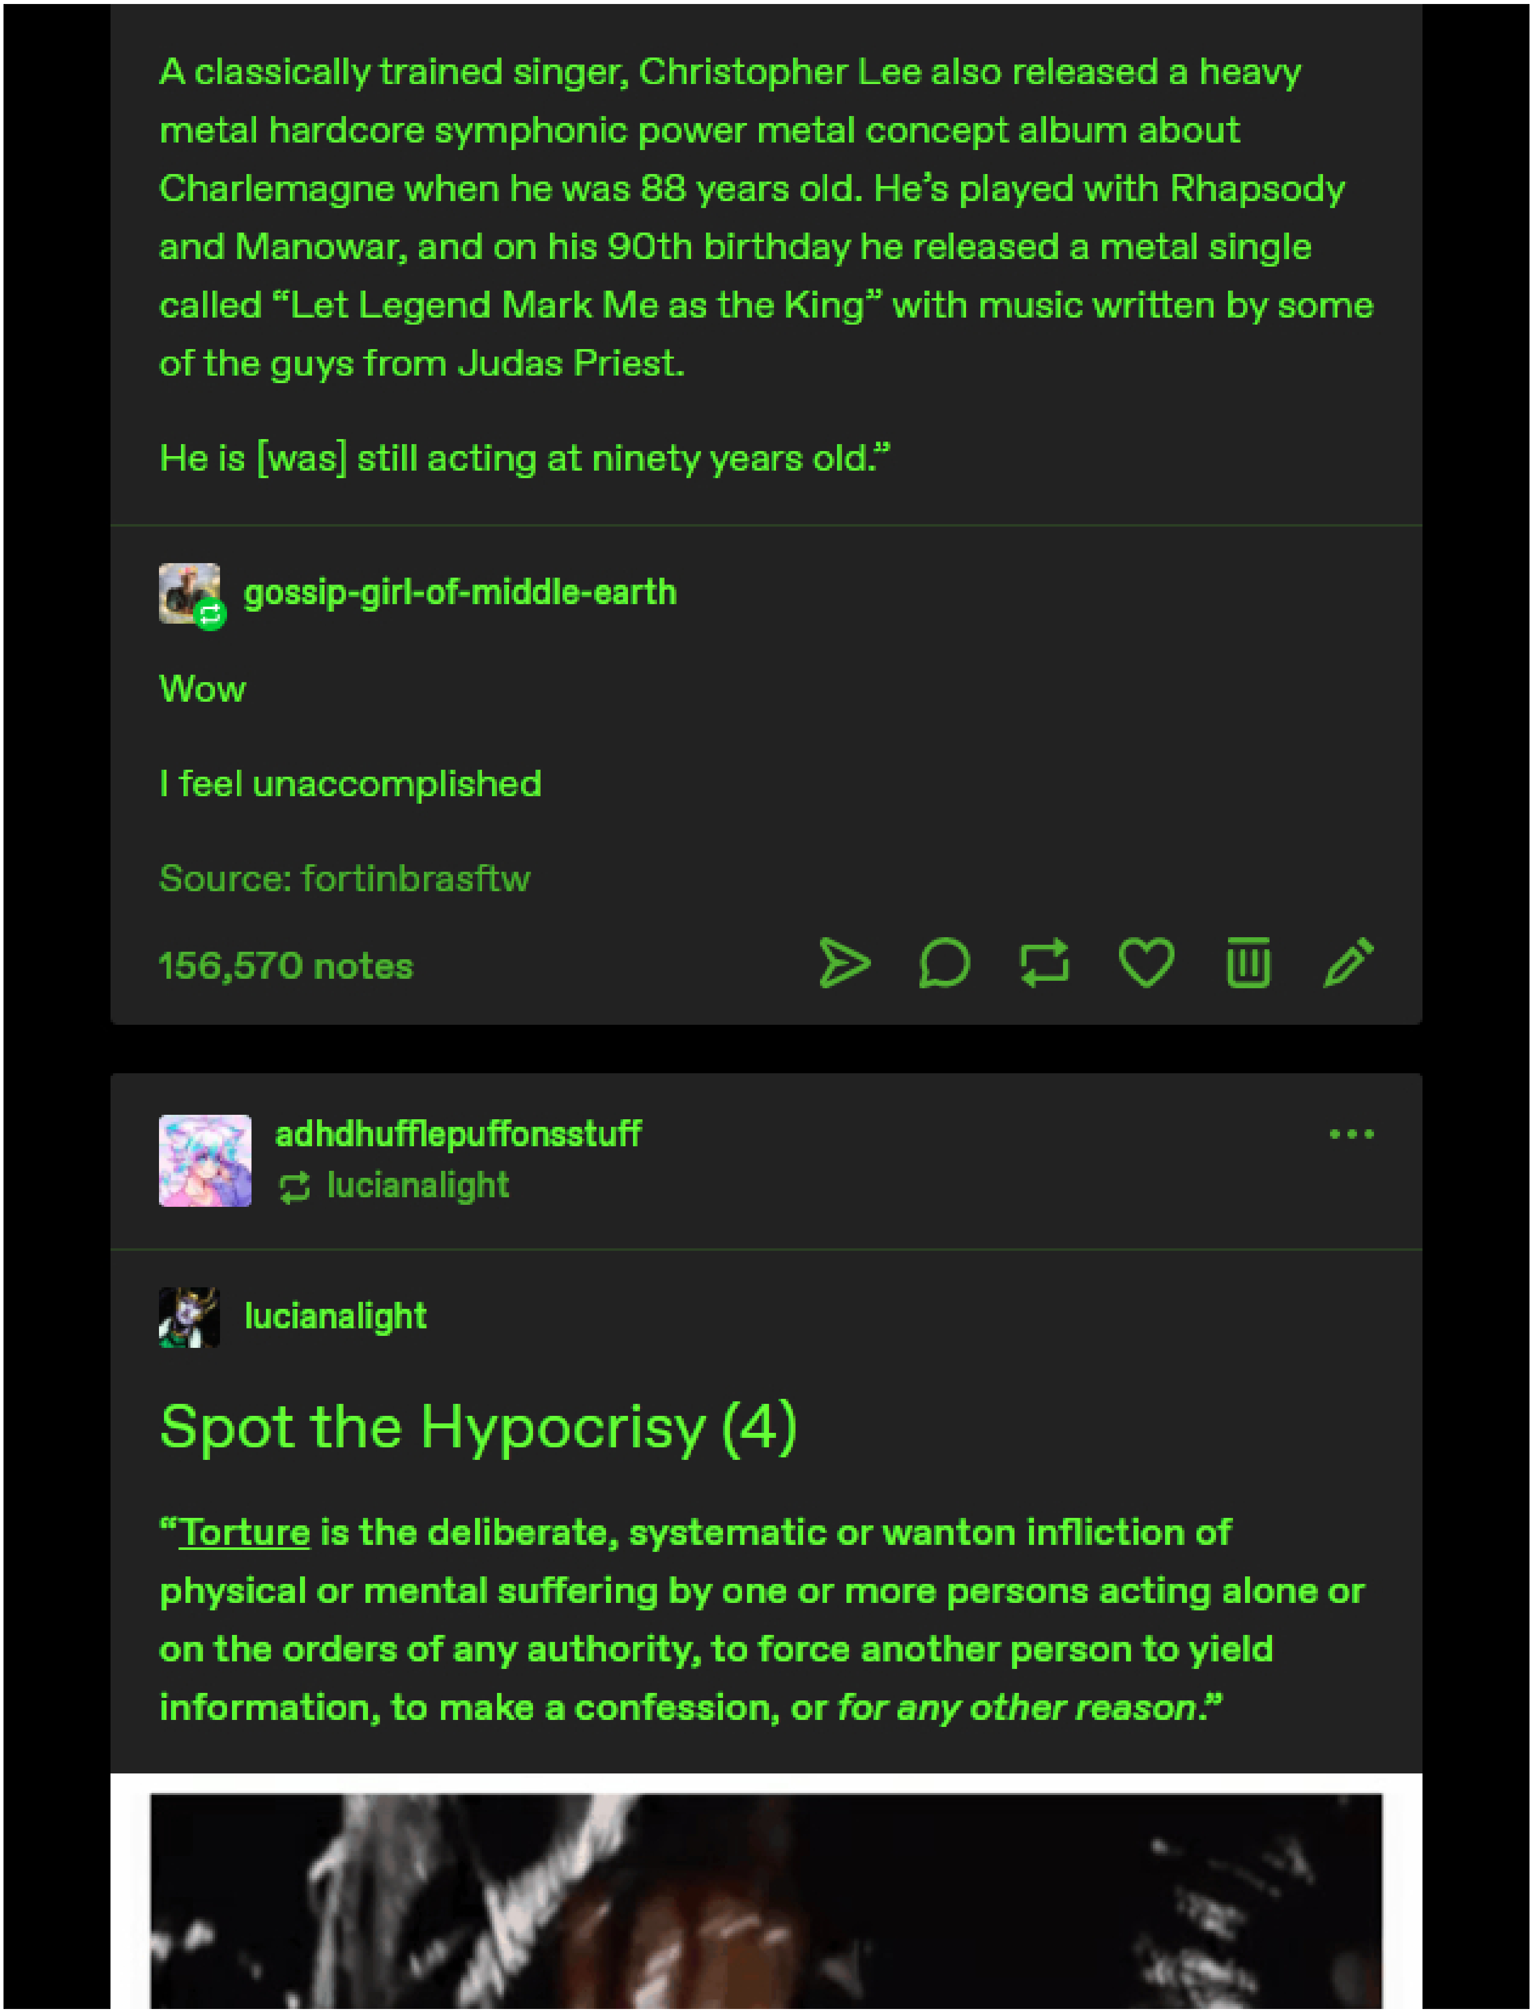
He's the only person to play both Sherlock and Mycroft Holmes (he was also Sir Henry Baskerville). His characters have executed both Charles the First of England and Louis the Sixteenth of France (and, as a badass side note, Lee is so into the idea of public executions that in real life he can recite every official executioner in England since the 15th century). He's portrayed Englishmen, Egyptians, Spaniards, Transylvanians, Frenchmen, Greeks, Poles, Chinese, Indians, Italians, Wallachians, Romans, Germans, Arabs, Gypsies, and Russians, played the lead role in the biography of Mohammad Ali Jinnah, the founder of Pakistan, speaks English, German, Russian, Swedish, Italian, and French, can do any English accent he wants, and sings everything from opera and death metal in a hardcore bass voice. IMDB credits him with 274 acting roles, Guiness says he's appeared in more films than anyone ever, and the Oracle of Bacon lists him as the Center of the Hollywood Universe because anyone in history links to him in 2.59 steps (he links to Bacon in 1). If that's not enough, Lee's movies have grossed more than any actor ever – his top five alone grossed $4.4B (number two is Harrison ford with $3B) and that doesn't even include the new Hobbit stuff

Lee also belongs to three stuntman unions, does all of his own stunts, once busted his face smashing head-first through an actual plate glass window for a scene, injured himself falling into an open grave while portraying Dracula, and once had his hand slashed open during a drunken sword fight with Errol Flynn.

Oh, and while we're on the subject of swordfights, Lee has appeared in more on-screen sword duels than any other actor ever. A masterful fencer, he's been in everything from cutlass fights on the decks of waterlogged pirate ships to rapier duels in seventeenth-century France to taking on a couple guys one-third of his age with a lightsabers and a fistful of force lightning on the deck of whatever the fuck they called Imperial Star Destroyers in the prequel movies.



A classically trained singer, Christopher Lee also released a heavy metal hardcore symphonic power metal concept album about Charlemagne when he was 88 years old. He's played with Rhapsody and Manowar, and on his 90th birthday he released a metal single called "Let Legend Mark Me as the King" with music written by some of the guys from Judas Priest.

He is [was] still acting at ninety years old."

Bruce Banner: commits suicide and survives it because of the Hulk

I got low. I didn't see an end so I put a bullet in my mouth and the other guy spit it out!

Fans: He tried to kill himself! He was suicidal! So sad…

Phil Coulson:is killed by Loki and Fury uses his death to unite the Avengers against Loki. Fury later revives Coulson using one of SHIELD's secret projects. Neither Fury nor Coulson sees it fit to tell the Avengers that Phil's alive. Coulson even asks Sif not to tell Thor that he is alive in one the AoS's episodes. Even after SHIELD is collapsed, Maria Hill still doesn't tell the truth to the Avengers.

- Do they know? The Avengers...that Fury played them?
- They're not level 7.

Fans: It would be better if he told the Avengers that he was alive. But still he is cool and we love him!

Tony Stark:*His home is attacked by Mandarin and he is thought dead by everyone. He uses this to his advantage to gain information on Mandarin and defeat him.

Technically, you're dead.

Fans: Yeah! He knows how to plan even when he is suffering from PTSD and without his technology.

Nick Fury:Intentionally fakes his death to throw off Hydra and make a plan to bring it down."

Can't kill you if you're already dead.

Fans: Wow! So smart! No wonder he is the director of SHIELD! This what a super spy should do!

Loki:*Commits suicide because of his father’s rejection and survives it. Later in TDW he gets injured trying to save Thor’s life. He survives his injury and uses it to his advantage.

Fans: LOKI FAKED HIS DEATH! He fakes his death all the time! He let go because he was bored!/wanted to escape punishment!/wanted to trick people that he is dead! He intentionally faked his death to usurp the throne from poor Odin! He is a trickster! SO EVIL!
